IRISH ENVOYS PHOTOGRAPHED ON ARRIVING IN BOSTON

GOVERNOR, MAYOR AND ARCHBISHOP WELCOME ENVOYS

Governor Draper, Mayor Fitzgerald and Archbishop O'Connell received and welcomed to the city to-day John E. Redmond, Daniel Boyle and Joseph Devlin, the three Irish envoys, who will appear at the Symphony Hall mass meeting to-morrow night.

At 11 o'clock to-day the three envoys, with Mrs. Redmond, Mr. and Mrs. T. B. Fitzpatrick, left the Hotel Lenox for a brief tour of the city.

REDMOND DELIGHTED WITH BRACING WEATHER.

Breakfast had been served the visitors in their rooms, and when they stepped out on the street all were surprised at the chilly gusts of October winds which greeted them.

"My, this is a pretty chilly reception, isn't it?" laughed Mr. Redmond. "It was very warm last night compared with this weather. But this is just the kind of weather I like. It puts new energy into any one. It is a delightful day, and I'm sure it is an augury of a happy visit.

"We are going to meet the Governor at the State House. Later we will be received by the Mayor. We will call on Archbishop O'Connell and hope, if time permits, that we can call on a number of other friends whom we met on our previous visit.

Refreshed After Trip.

All in the party seemed refreshed from their trip of yesterday. Mr. Devlin smiled genially when surprise was expressed that the others in the party had not left the hotel until he was ready.

"Mr. Redmond was the first man out to-day," he said, "but they can't lose the rest of us, you know. We are just as anxious to see the old friends as Mr. and Mrs. Redmond are."

Mrs. Redmond wore a light feather boa. She was dressed in a plum colored traveling gown and her cheeks glowed with the fresh color, typical of the beautiful Irish lady. Her blue eyes snapped as she laughed with the others at the efforts of the photographers to induce Mr. Redmond to change the somewhat austere expression which is his.

Mr. Fitzpatrick, national treasurer of the United Irish League of America, said the visitors were delighted at the thought that they were again with the city of Boston, where they felt a warm welcome is awaiting them.

This afternoon Mrs. Redmond was the guest in Cambridge of Mrs. Augustine J. Daly, wife of ex-Mayor Daly, president of the Boston Central Branch of the United Irish League. Mrs. Daly conducted the wife of the Irish leader on a visit to the historic places in the University City, one of the notable calls being the home of Longfellow, where they were guests of Mrs. Richard H. Dana, a daughter of the poet.

Early to-morrow afternoon Mr. Redmond and his party will proceed to Beverly by automobile, where they are to make a call upon President Taft. The visit will be entirely private and informal.

Late this afternoon a short conference is held at the Hotel Lenox between the visitors and some of the local committee on arrangements to arrange some details for the big mass meeting to be held in Symphony Hall to-morrow night.

To-morrow morning the party will attend the solemn pontifical mass at the Cathedral. Cardinal Vannutelli is expected to arrive in Boston late to-day that he may take a part in to-morrow's service.

The mass meeting to-morrow night will be opened at 8 o'clock by President Augustine J. Daly, who will introduce Mayor Fitzgerald as the chairman.

Mr. Redmond stated to-day that at the meeting to-morrow night he would talk for the most part on conditions in Ireland and would also touch upon the political conditions in England. He said: the masses.

Would Divide Tax Burden.

"Such action was taken when the land get was proposed. This law would have allowed the poor to take from their shoulders some of the great tax burdens, which, of course, would have to be taken up in part by some of the richer men in the

POLICE COURSE FOR BIG RACE AT FAIRMOUNT

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 8.—Taking a lesson from the fatal Vanderbilt cup race, the automobile course for the 200-mile Fairmount Park track race, one of the biggest planned to-day that spectators feared they would not be able to see the course when the race began.

Throughout the morning vast crowds were moving toward the park. It was road races of the year, was so thoroughly million people would make up the attendance. In spite of yesterday's rain, the track this morning was in excellent condition.

There were thirty-two entrants in the race, among them some of the most noted drivers in America. The entrants who drove in the Vanderbilt cup included Chevrolet, Joseph Dawson, John Aitken, Mortimer Roberts and Ralph Mulford.

In addition to the Fairmount cup, nearly $10,000 was put in prizes. George Robertson, who twice won the race, was not an entrant. Harry Grant, who won the Vanderbilt cup, withdrew at the last moment.

SOUTH END GROUNDS, Oct. 8.—The little band of loyal rooters for the Doves saw the last of their pets this afternoon when the Birds closed their home series in a double-header against Philadelphia.

With the season practically over, it was not expected that the boys would play extraordinarily fast ball, but as usual there was plenty of fun, and something going on every minute.

AMERICAN LEAGUE PARK, N. Y., Oct. 8.—The Yankees and Boston Red Sox closed the American League season of 1910 here this afternoon in a double-header.

Despite the fact that the weather was far more suitable for football than baseball a large crowd turned out to witness the knights of the diamond mingle.

Although the Yanks had second place cinched before the double-header started, they were more than anxious to cop both games so as to close the season at this park in a blaze of glory.

Next season the Yankees go to another pasture, their new park at Broadway and 225th street. Naturally they wanted to wind up at these grounds a winner.

The Boston players warmed up like a lot of two-year-olds, in the preliminary practice and the fans were sure that they would see some grand baseball. Both Managers Chase and Donovan had their entire staff of box men warmed up, but neither knew right up to the last minute which they would use.

To-morrow's celebration will be marked by a parade in the morning. In the afternoon services will be attended at St. John's Episcopal Church.

FR. JOHN'S MEDICINE FOR COLDS
Is unequalled. Builds you up. Gives strength. **

DEMOCRATIC COMPROMISE IS OFFERED

John R. Thayer of Worcester, who acted as permanent chairman of the Democratic State Convention at Faneuil Hall on Thursday, was this afternoon put before the committee that is to decide upon the candidates for Governor and Lieutenant-Governor as the best man to lead the ticket.

Joseph A. Maynard, chairman of the Boston Democratic City Committee, and himself a member of the nominating committee, presented to the other members of the committee Mr. Thayer's name after having had a long talk at noon with Mayor Fitzgerald.

The committee convened at the Boston Tavern at 12:30 o'clock. This was the second meeting of the committee to-day, the first one adjourning for an hour at 11:30 o'clock.

Former Senator William P. Hayes, a member of the committee, said at the close of the first session to-day that up to that time they had not taken up a consideration of a candidate for the first place on the ticket.

He said in his opinion the place would be accepted if it was tendered by them to Colonel William A. Gaston, Judge John C. Crosby, Judge Charles A. DeCourcey, Joseph H. O'Neil, James H. Vahey or Congressman Eugene N. Foss.

The committee tried to select a fifth member at the forenoon session, but was unable to agree on anyone. The names of Dr. John W. Coughlin, of Fall River, Daniel T. O'Connell, of Boston, and Frederick J. Stimson were considered this afternoon to complete the committee.

Mr. Hayes went to the Quincy House after the first session of the committee. He said:

"Thus far the committee has gone no farther than to attempt to agree upon a fifth member. We have not taken up the matter of a candidate for the first place on the ticket. I want to impress this on you—that neither the committee as whole nor no two members of the committee acting together have put the matter of a nomination up to any candidate. Therefore the talk that this or that man has declined the nomination is without foundation.

"Several men have been seen by men not members of this committee who will no doubt communicate with us but you can say positively that the nomination has not been turned down, and in our opinions would not be turned down by William A. Gaston, Judge Crosby, Judge DeCourcey, Joseph H. O'Neil, James H. Vahey or Congressman Foss."

Mansfield at Quincy House.

Frederick W. Mansfield, candidate pro tem for governor, came to the Quincy house to-day, getting there about quarter of twelve. He would say nothing for publication. He went immediately to the third floor, where he saw James H. Vahey just as the latter was coming out of his room. The two talked together in the corridor for about ten minutes. Neither would say what their conversation was about.

Mr. Vahey was asked if he was a receptive candidate for first place on the ticket and he said that he was not. He stated that he would issue a detailed statement of his position late this afternoon.

It was learned to-day that Judge Crosby had been approached regarding the Democratic nomination by James W. Synan of Pittsfield, former chairman of the Democratic State Committee, who is trying to make arrangements to bring Judge Crosby's name before the Faneuil Hall committee.

The committee let it be known that it was their intention to choose a candidate for Governor to-day if possible. Two members of the committee, Chairman Macleod of the Democratic State Committee and Chairman Maynard of the Democratic City Committee are strongly in favor of nominating Colonel William A. Gaston.

E. Gerry Brown of Brockton came to Boston to-day for the purpose of trying to get Congressman Eugene N. Foss and James H. Vahey in conference and of inducing them to take first and second places on the ticket.

The Boston News Bureau printed the story to-day to the effect that some of the close business friends of Colonel Gaston were urging him to reject the nomination for Governor because of the manner in which it would come to him. The story stated that Mr. Gaston would have accepted the nomination had it come from a harmonious convention.

What Mr. Vahey Says.

Mr. Vahey was at the Quincy House to-day. When seen there by a reporter for the AMERICAN about a possible conference with Mr. Foss he said:

"I know of no reason why Congressman Foss and I should have a conference and none has been arranged between us. The matter of deciding upon the two candidates at the head of the Democratic ticket remains entirely with the committee selected for that work."

"Whom do you favor as a fifth man for that committee?" Senator Vahey was asked.

"There will be no fifth man until the committee decides that it can't agree," was the Senator's significant reply.

"Practically speaking," said E. Gerry Brown, "the Faneuil Hall convention is still in session. It has merely taken a recess while a committee is out to bring in a ticket.

"There can be no genuine nomination until the paper has been filed with the Secretary of State.

"In this situation it seems to me that there is only one thing to do to save the party. At the end of the second ballot Eugene N. Foss had 438 votes and James H. Vahey 425 votes.

"The convention wanted these two men above all others. They were the party leaders in the great campaign of last year. They ought to be nominated again.

"My purpose in coming to town is to try to get Mr. Foss and Mr. Vahey together on this proposition. The members of the Committee of Four, I understand they have been unable to agree upon a fifth man, are supposed to represent the leading candidates.

"I say that it doesn't make much difference whether the ticket this year is 'Vahey and Foss' or 'Foss and Vahey.' The important thing is that practically all the votes of this convention on the second ballot were divided between them almost equally. Their party wants them and they ought to serve."

ARREST BARNES IN CAUCUS CASE

Rainford H. Barnes of No. 10 Everett road, Dorchester, was arrested to-day by Lieutenant Lee of the district attorney's office on an indictment accusing him of falsely making nomination papers at the primary caucuses of September 27. Barnes was out for the Republican nomination for the State Senate in the Eighth District. Eight persons are said to have sworn that their names were forged to Barnes's nomination papers.

Herman Hormel, secretary of the Republican City Committee, made the first complaint against Barnes. District Attorney Pelletier ordered an investigation, and the secret indictment was found by the Grand Jury.

After being booked at police headquarters, Barnes was taken to the District Attorney's office, where he was bailed in $1,000 by William Drew.

300 MONKS BATTLE PORTUGUESE TROOPS; SCORE ARE KILLED

LISBON, Oct. 8.—A score or more monks are reported dead, several soldiers and sailors killed and many wounded in the storming of the Quelphos Jesuit Convent to-day. The attack was precipitated by a monk who had been posted as a sentry in anticipation of an attack on the convent. A group of people were passing whom the monk evidently mistook for an attacking force and he hurled a hand grenade among them.

Several are said to have been wounded and word of the attack spread like wildfire among the citizens, who, seizing the first arms they could get hold of, rushed to the convent in a mass and endeavored to storm it. The monkish garrison was ready and repelled the attack with considerable loss.

Artillery Riddles Convent Walls.

An appeal for aid was sent by the citizens to the republican garrison and a body of artillery, cavalry and infantry was hurried to the scene and on the way was joined by a detachment of sailors. The artillery opened a heavy fire upon the structure, riddling the walls with shells. Many of the monks were killed and wounded, but they refused to surrender and repulsed several charges of the military.

The convent was surrendered later and the surviving monks were allowed to depart, taking their dead and wounded with them. At least 300 monks were engaged in the conflict. Before the fight was over two full regiments had beleagured the building. Reports from various sections of the country stated that the forcible expulsion of monks was resulting in much violence and that a heavy death toll was expected before the day was ended.

Even under a republic, the Portuguese people will have to wait for their liberty. A representative National Assembly will not be convened for six months. This announcement is made by Senor Lima, the Portuguese minister to France, says a dispatch from Paris.

"The government will give the people a congress composed of delegates elected by the constituency of the republic, but it would not be feasible to do this immediately," said he. "Portugal needs a mild dictatorship to restore order before the entire conduct of affairs is given into the hands of the people. The congress will not be convoked for at least six months."

Keeps Alfonso Advised.

Manuel, since his arrival at Gibraltar, has kept in close telegraphic touch with King Alfonso of Spain, it became known to-day.

It is believed that, at the personal request of King Alfonso, Manuel is keeping him posted as to his movements and plans. The Spanish King, realizing the tremendous influence which a reactionary movement on the part of the former Portuguese ruler would have on the turbulent undercurrent of unrest in Spain, is said to have requested that he be informed in advance if Manuel decides to lead in person a movement to regain his throne.

Spain, according to dispatches, was held in the iron hand of despotic military sway to-day, and while peace prevailed revolutionary leaders looked upon it more in the light of an armed truce.

It has become evident that the anti-monarchists have been temporarily cowed by the drastic measures taken by Alfonso and his ministry. At Valencia, where the boldest republican demonstration has taken place, the municipal guard patrols the streets and the jails are filled with political prisoners. Crowds in the streets are dispersed and republican colors torn down.

Clerical Exodus Begins.

The exodus of clericals began from the Portuguese republic to-day. At the expiration of the twenty-four hours which had been granted members of Catholic orders to leave the country hundreds of them began flocking toward the frontier. Two Catholic monasteries were stormed by the Republicans, one at Campolide and another at Graca. A number of priests were killed in the fighting. It is feared that the republic will confiscate all church property in Portugal and the Vatican has taken steps to prevent this through the offices of friendly powers.

The flight from Portugal to-day did not include Catholics alone. All soldiers who had not sworn allegiance to the red and green standard of the republic were ordered to leave upon pain of arrest and and monarchist families fled to the coast and into Spain.

A disposition was evidenced in the foreign capitals to-day to await the result of the Portuguese rebellion upon Spain before taking cognizance of the new Portuguese regime.

Although the republic is the recognized government in Lisbon, Oporto and the greater part of the interior of Portugal, the northern provinces have not yet foresworn their allegiance to Manuel.

A report from Madrid stated that the royalists had begun taking heart through the stubbornness with which the advance of republicanism was being contested in the northern provinces where the church is very strong.

Warship Fleet Gathers.

The indications to-day are that ere another twenty-four hours have elapsed a great international war fleet will be at anchor off the Portuguese coast. The Brazilian cruiser Arrosa was in the Tagus harbor this morning, to which point the American cruiser Des Moines was dispatched from Gibraltar. The British cruisers Minerva and Newcastle left Gibraltar for Oporto, while three Spanish warships were held at Algeciras for orders to proceed either to Lisbon or some other Portuguese point. The French cruiser Admiral Aube departed for Portugal, and it was said in naval circles at Toulon that the battleships Veritas, Justice and Liberte would likely be ordered into Portuguese waters. The Italian battleship Regina Elena proceeded to Cadiz, Spain, to await orders, and it is believed that she, too, would be ordered towards Portugal.

The Republicans continue to arrest members of the municipal guard of Lisbon according to the latest advices. Many convents have been seized by the troops of the provisional government and a vast store of hidden wealth unearthed. The fleeing priests were all searched by soldiers and stripped of all their money except sufficient to pay their passage into a foreign country.

FIVE CONVICTS STILL AT LARGE

NEW YORK, Oct. 8.—Search for the five escaped convicts from Sing Sing prison, who were led in the break for liberty by "Big Bill" Green, the highwayman, is being vigorously pressed to-day, but so far without results. In the hunt for the fugitive felons the prison authorities are being aided by the police of all the towns north and south of Ossining and the county authorities throughout the State.

All sorts of rumors concerning the movements of the convicts have been received, but no definite information giving directness to the man hunt has yet been obtained. The success of the fugitives in finding a hiding place after emerging into the world in prison garb is attributed to the fact that Green has numerous friends in Ossining, which is his home.

CROWLEY FREE IN THEFT CASE

A no-bill was reported by the Grand Jury in the Superior Court before Judge Stevens to-day in the case of Cornelius F. Crowley, formerly of the City Collector's office, who was charged with the larceny of $600 from that department.

The charge against Crowley was made following a report by the Finance Commission, which investigated the collector's department. The commission asked the District Attorney to investigate.

Several witnesses were called and appeared before the Grand Jury this week.

BIG GREETING TO ENVOYS OF IRELAND HERE

country. But the budget was rejected by the House of Lords.

"Later, of course, the Lords came to a realization of the fact that the English people are aroused, and they passed the budget. But this has not given them any better position than that they held before.

"Among the Scotch the movement for home rule has been gaining steadily. However, I have carefully gone over the address I hope to make to-morrow night, and I hope to present all this and a great deal more to the people of Boston, who have always shown such a deep and earnest feeling for the welfare of their mother country."

A large number of letters have reached the executive offices of the United Irish League from prominent citizens of Greater Boston, in relation to the meeting to-morrow night in Symphony Hall. Among the number is the following from Albion A. Perry, ex-Mayor of Somerville:

Ex-Mayor Perry's Letter.

Somerville, Mass., Oct. 7, 1910.

John O'Callaghan, 43 Globe building, Boston, Mass.:

My Dear Sir—I have planned to go to Maine to-day, to be absent several weeks, hence I shall not be able to accept your kind invitation to attend the meeting in Symphony Hall next Sunday evening in behalf of home rule for Ireland.

Let me assure you, nevertheless, of my deep interest in your great and righteous cause. You are certainly making good progress, and I hope to live to see the wrong of centuries righted in the green isle across the sea. With the oppressor's yoke torn from her neck, Ireland will enter upon a career of prosperity and happiness which shall gladden the hearts of her devoted and patriotic people and bring joy and satisfaction to every true lover of humanity on the face of the earth.

Thanking you for the honor conferred by your invitation, I am, yours sincerely,

ALBION A. PERRY.

For half an hour before the meeting is opened a grand concert of Irish airs will be given on the Symphony Hall organ by Professor John A. O'Shea.

GAS HOUSE BLAZE CAUSES BIG SCARE

Fire in the retort house of the Cambridge Gas Light Company on Third street, East Cambridge, shortly after 11 o'clock to-day, gave the fire department a bad scare for nearly an hour, and a tough battle to confine the flames to the building. Explosions were feared momentarily, and the fear that the flames might spread to other buildings surrounded by huge storage tanks filled with gas increased the anxiety. The fire started from an over heated furnace in the retort house. This structure is 200 feet long, three stories high and of brick construction. The fire destroyed the roof. The loss is estimated at $800.

MISSING WOMAN FOUND.

Lieutenant Carter, of the Somerville police, found missing Mrs. Mary Grant, forty-five, at No. 171 Sheridan avenue, Medford. The woman formerly lived at No. 28 Rush street, East Somerville, which has since been dismantled by her husband, Fred Grant, who informs the police that during twenty-seven years of married life his wife has disappeared from home four times.

The Franklin Square House for working and student girls on West Newton street is making an effort to raise the last $100,000 of the $350,000, which was the cost of the property. Dr. George K. Starting without a dollar only eight years ago, I think that our record of progress has been so extraordinary that no one who now gives can feel that he is giving to a 'forlorn hope,' and when this property is freed from indebtedness this philanthropy will then be practically self supporting. In other words it will be a philanthropy on a business basis." All pledges should be sent to George L. Perrin, president, No. 11 East Newton street, or to Jere A. BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN.

OUTLAW SHOT, STILL DEFIES ARMED POSSE

WINTER, Wis., Oct. 8.—Although shot and wounded early to-day, John Dietz, the Cameron Dam outlaw, who has defied seventy armed men to capture him for the last ten days is still alive and barricaded in his cabin. The carefully arranged daylight ambush came to nothing.

The failure of the movement against Dietz to-day has discouraged many of the special deputies. Forty of them have notified Sheriff Madden they will not stay out another night. This probably means the collapse of the present seige.

With Dietz are his wife, a twenty-year-old son, a daughter fourteen years old and another son seven years old. Any one of them, according to the neighbors can shoot the eye out of a squirrel at 200 yards.

At the conclusion of a conference with the Attorney-General, Dietz predicted that he would be shot, but declared that he would die a martyr to his cause and his family. The Governor's representatives offered to guarantee Dietz immunity from the law for all of the criminal charges against him and the members of his family, with the exception of the shooting of a school trustee, if he would surrender.

He was offered ample protection, legal counsel and a change of venue, and Dietz insisted that all civil claims against him be dismissed before he would surrender. These civil claims include judgments amounting to $25,000.

Pointing at the United States flag waving above the cabin Dietz said:

"I'm going to stay right here after that is shot to rags. Shoot when you are ready.

"This is my home. I will die right here, where I have lived and where we have all resisted attempts at assassination. There floats the flag. I will die beneath it fighting for my rights like a good American.

KIDNEY OR BLADDER MISERY GOES AND YOUR LAME BACK FEELS FINE.

No reader of this paper, whether man or woman, need be miserable because of Backache or kidney or bladder disorders.

The time to cure kidney trouble is while it is only trouble—Before it settles into Dropsy, Gravel, Diabetes or Bright's Disease.

Pape's Diuretic acts at once upon the kidneys, bladder and entire urinary system, cleanses, heals and regulates these organs, ducts and glands and completes the cure within a few days. The moment you suspect any kidney or urinary derangement, or feel a constant dull backache or notice that the urine is thick, cloudy, offensive or full of sediment, irregular of passage or attended by a sensation of scalding, you should begin taking Pape's Diuretic as directed, with the knowledge that there is no other remedy, at any price, made anywhere else in the world, which will effect so thorough and prompt a cure.

Misery in the back, sides or loins, sick headache, inflamed or puffy eyelids, nervousness, prostatic trouble, rheumatism and darting pains, heart palpitations, bilious stomach, dizziness, sleeplessness, listless, weak, worn-out feeling and other symptoms caused by inactive, sluggish kidneys simply vanish. Uncontrollable urination (especially at night), smarting, discolored water and all bladder misery ends.

Your physician, pharmacist, banker or any mercantile agency will vouch for the responsibility of Pape, Thompson & Pape of Cincinnati, Ohio, who prepare Pape's Diuretic—50 cent treatment—sold by every druggist in the world.

500 WITHOUT WORK BECAUSE OF FIRE

PEABODY, Oct. 8.—A spectacular fire that attracted hundreds to the scene caused damage estimated at several thousands of dollars to the leather plant of Edward W. McCarthy & Co. The building for a distance of fifty feet, three stories in height, was destroyed with its stock and machinery. The factory employs between 400 and 500 hands, all of whom are thrown out of employment temporarily.

HOW TO GROW HAIR

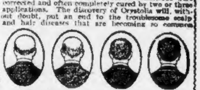
A SIMPLE, SAFE AND RELIABLE WAY THAT PRODUCES SURPRISING RESULTS.

NEW DRUG CRYSTOLIS CAUSES BIG STIR AMONG HAIR SPECIALISTS.

$1,000 REWARD IF THEY FAIL.

Cut Out Free Coupon Below and Mail To-day.

Those who have become prematurely gray or who are troubled with scalp or hair diseases, such as falling hair, dandruff, baldness, itching scalp, etc., know full well the humiliation that they cause. There is no need, however, of such conditions. These troubles can be quickly overcome by Crystolis, the new drug recently discovered at the Creslo Laboratories at Scranton, Pa. Since its discovery, a little over a year ago, Crystolis has been found to contain marvellous properties for producing a new growth of hair. In subjecting it to various tests in the worst cases of baldness, dandruff, itching scalp, etc., the results obtained by the experimenting chemists were considered almost miraculous. In every case it was found that where there were any hair roots left it would produce a new and luxuriant growth of hair in from four to six weeks' time. Gray or faded hair was often restored to its natural color in from 10 to 14 days' time. In minor cases of scalp and hair diseases, such as dandruff, falling hair, itching scalp, etc., it was found that these unnatural conditions were corrected and often completely cured by two or three applications. The discovery of Crystolis will, without doubt, put an end to the troublesome scalp and hair diseases that are becoming so common with the American people. Women who have been forced into wearing false hair will greatly welcome this marvellous product, as, aside from its many other virtues, it adds a beautiful gloss and lustre to the old hair. Besides, it contains no oil, and has a tendency to make the hair light and fluffy.



This illustrates the result of a few weeks' treatment with Crystolis.

The managers of the Creslo Laboratories have such strong faith in Crystolis we have been authorized to make the following remarkable offer: They will forfeit $1,000 in gold if they fail to prove that Crystolis actually grows hair. They will forfeit $1,000 in gold if any one can prove they were not the first discoverers of Crystolis. They will forfeit $1,000 in gold if it can be proven that it contains any oil, dye or coloring matter of any kind. They will forfeit $1,000 in gold if every testimonial and sworn statement which they publish is not absolutely genuine. Arrangements have been made with the Laboratories to furnish free information in regard to this new process to all Boston American readers. Merely cut out and send in the coupon below, and you will receive free particulars of this marvellous new product by return mail.

"VODVIL" JUST JOY RIDE FOR MISS LIBBEY

CHICAGO, Oct. 8.—Why you know that Laura Jean Libbey's going into vaudeville is just the most ridiculous thing!

She doubled over and snickered and laughed until you were sure she was going to bust when she came to Chicago. It was all on account of some old manager, you know. He called her up one day and told her she ought to do it. She said he was foolish, that it was "absolutely impossible." But he just kept on talking and switched if she didn't agree finally to go on for a few weeks. Of course he mentioned a fat salary, but that didn't figure. The real reason why she signed up was so she could come out to Chicago and look at "all the dear girls who have read my books."

"I just wanted to shake them by the hand and love them all, the dears!"

Miss Libbey left her rooms in the Congress Hotel and came down-stairs to grant a request for an interview.

Just Started to Bed.

"I had started to bed just a minute ago," she said. "You know my sister will go to bed early. And I had my dress off, too. I had my grey on first, but I thought I'd put this white one on."

And then another string of chuckles that sputtered along like chestnuts in a hot frying pan.

"Just tell us two or three things about love, Miss Libbey, and then you can go up-stairs and make your sister get over on her side."

"O no, I won't have to do that. We've got two beds, little ones."

But Miss Libbey was disinclined to drift into an analysis of the tender passion and preferred rather to dwell on the rip snorting time she expected to have as a play actress.

"You know, when they persuaded me finally to sign a contract, why, of course, I wanted a leading man. It's awfully comforting to have somebody around you than you can—can—can——"

Wants to Lean on Some One.

"Borrow from?"

"No! Somebody that you can sort of lean on. But the manager said no, that I must march right out there and do what I was going to do all by myself.

"Why, you'll do it like a major," he told me. And really for two weeks in New York it went splendid. You know I draw a really intellectual class of audience, and I suppose the vaudeville company expects me to attract the same sort of patronage here—literary, you know."

And Miss Libbey gazed reflectively at the wall as though allowing her fancy to run back over the forty odd titles that have given her a place in the literary hall of fame. Suddenly she asekd:

"Of course, you've read my books?"

"Um—yes. O, yes! Of course—read several of 'em when I was a boy."

"Which ones did you like best?"

"Tempest and Sunshine."

"Why—er—that is—you see it was hard to decide between the two. Never could make up my mind whether I liked 'Mill on the Floss' or 'Tempest and Sunshine' best."

"Those both are good, but I didn't write either of them."

"No, of course you didn't, but—but your style is much like both."

To pull things out of a dreadful mess the subject of love was broached once more, and Miss Libbey enciated some of her theories of the grand passion.

Until folks are married they run around half-souled. Every youth and every young woman has a half-soul. Until these half-souls meet—the ones whose edges fit right together—there can be no real happiness. One half-soul may be in India and the other in Kokomo, but surer than sin they'll get together finally.

Can Tell Ill-Matched Souls.

Once in a while you run across marriages where the right half-souls are not joined. But you can't tell it right away. Because they're always fighting so that they split everything up, and you forget the ragged edges of the disjointed half-souls.

Nobody can get along without love. Young and old, black and white, dyspeptics and insurgents must have it, and even babies cry for it. Miss Libbey has written forty novels about it—"O, yes, I guess it's about forty—I've not counted them for so long"—and now she is going to quit. She said she did not think she ever would write another book.

PROTEST NEW PHONE RATES IN SUBURBS

Vigorous protest against the new telephone rates comes from the Dedham district on one side of Boston and from Medford and Malden districts on the other.

The Men's Club of Dedham Methodist Church has voted unanimously that the new rates are detrimental to Dedham subscribers. This vote was passed after two representatives of the telephone company had explained to the club the advantages of the new rate from the telephone company's standpoint. Wallace H. Bond, president of the club, said: "Under the proposed rates my telephone bill will be twice as large as it is at present. It is large enough now. I might as well buy an automobile with the difference."

Medford and Malden subscribers say they are not getting a square deal so far as Medford exchange is concerned. They say that Medford is placed in the same zone as Malden, but they allege that they are unable to communicate with part of Medford which comes under the Arlington exchange. Many West Medford subscribers are listed as Arlington.

PNEUMONIA KILLED

70,033 Last Year.

And Pneumonia Is a Preventable Disease

The germ theory as applied to pneumonia is a hobby that many of our "know-it-all" physicians ride. They tell us of the bacilli, diplococcus lanceolatus microbes and micro-organisms being the cause of pneumonia. Is it any wonder that patients die that are filled with such "[illegible]" critters?

A neglected cold is the only germ that develops pneumonia.

There is no known sure cure for pneumonia. But it can be PREVENTED. Dr. Hilton of Lowell, Mass., who has been preaching and practicing prevention for the past twenty years, has proved beyond a doubt that his specific No. 3 WILL PREVENT Pneumonia when taken as directed.

Dr. Hilton's specific No. 3 is the only known remedy that will PREVENT Pneumonia and not kill the Heart or injure the stomach.

No. 3 is the best insurance one can have, don't have to die to win. Only 50 cents a bottle. All druggists.

MOTHER WHO TRIED SUICIDE WITH SON HELD

Mrs. Mary Armstrong, a good looking, neatly clad woman, was arraigned before Judge Murray to-day on the charge of attempted murder because she jumped overboard from Northern wharf on Thursday with her eight-year-old son, Ernest, in her arms, to seek death for both. She was made disheartened and desperate by want, and acted on an impulse, she told Chief Inspector Dugan, which was prompted by despair.

"It is the saddest case I have heard of in a long time," said Judge Murray after the hearing was over.

He held her for a hearing on October 11 under $5,000 bonds, but as she could not furnish bail instead of sending her to jail she was put in the custody of a probation officer and will stay in the Welcome Home in Dorchester until the day of the second arraignment. Her boy will be placed in the Little Wanderers' Home, where his mother can see him.

Mother's Sad Story.

When Mrs. Armstrong, who is thirty-three years old, was arraigned to-day Judge Murray asked her if she wanted a hearing before him or would waive examination, but she did not understand what either proceeding meant, and Chief Dugan made a statement of what she told him. To the police official she had said:

"I was married in Ipswich in 1901 and my husband worked in a mill in Lawrence. He left me soon after we were married and I have no idea what became of him. I heard once that he had been drowned in the Merrimac River. I could not take care of my child, and I put him in the Little Wanderers' Home, for adoption, and when another family took him I was not allowed to see him under the rules.

"I wrote several letters to the home about my boy and finally I came to Boston about two weeks ago. I went to the home. On Thursday the manager told me my boy had been sent back, as there was illness in the family where he had been living they could not keep him. The manager advised me to take him. He said I looked well and strong enough to do that. I took him over to a park and sat down and thought.

Had no Place to Turn.

"I had no money and was without work. I did not know where to go or what to do. I did not know how to get food or a shelter for my child. Where to turn and what to do I could not tell. Then I thought of the water. An impulse came over me to jump overboard."

When Mrs. Armstrong leaped overboard she was rescued by men who saw her take the plunge. Her son is eight years old. Chief Inspector Dugan feels deep sympathy for the unfortunate woman, and said he intended to see that District Attorney Pelletier was informed of the pitiful circumstances surrounding her.

TWO ARRESTED IN RICE MURDER CASE

NEW YORK, Oct. 8.—Mystery surrounds the arrest in Brooklyn to-day of a man and a woman reported to be suspected in connection with the murder of William F. Rice, the Cleveland lawyer, on August 6. While the Brooklyn police do not appear to know much about the case, the arrests having been made at the instance of Superintendent Dimaio of the Pinkerton agency in Pittsburg, dispatches from the latter city say Dimaio telephoned there he had four suspects in the Rice case and expected confessions from at least two some time to-day.

MAN ESCAPES PRISON BECAUSE OF FAMILY

John F. Clark of City Point escaped a jail sentence to-day because he has a wife and child dependent upon him, Judge Fallon told him so in South Boston District Court. Then the judge fined Clark $50 for assault and battery on Benjamin F. Sampson, a neighbor who is a semi-invalid.

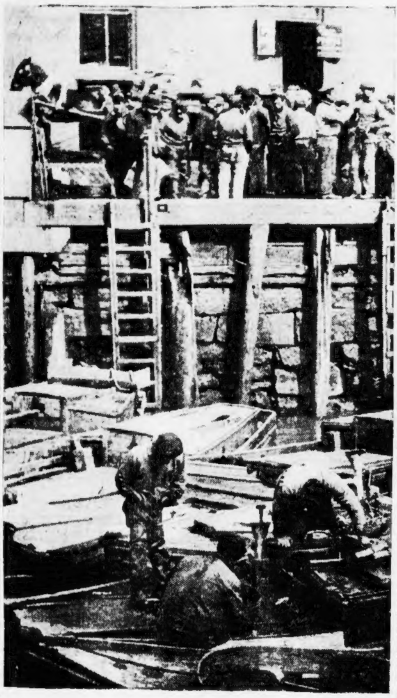
FIVE FISHING BOATS SUNK AT 'T' WHARF, SMALL RIOT RESULTS



Scene at "T" Wharf to-day, from snapshot made during excitement among fishermen.

A miniature riot was started to-day among two factions of Italian dory fishermen at 'T' wharf when it was discovered that five of the so-called "net" boats had been sunk during the night. The two factions are the "net" fishermen and the "hook and line" fishermen.

The discovery was made at 2.30 when the first squad of net fishermen came to the wharf to catch the favorable tide for their outgoing trip.

Rival Fishermen Are Blamed.

When the netters found that five of their dories had been sunk while hook and line boats which were anchored alongside were unharmed, the netters instantly blamed their "hook and line" rivals for the mischief.

Resolving to get even upon the "hook and liners," the net fishermen started in to raise their sunken craft. In this hard task they were aided by other "net" fishermen whose boats had not been touched.

Meanwhile the hook and line contingent began to arrive. The hook and line men were taxed with the damage to the net boats. This was hotly denied. Accusations and denials flew thick and fast, couched in the fiery language of Calabria and Sicily, which lends itself splendidly to exchange of epithet.

Net Men in Good Luck.

There are about seventy-five boats in the Italian dory fleet which comes in to T wharf slips. These boats are manned by 200 fishermen, almost equally divided between "hook and liners" and "netters." Of late the net men have been having better luck. The five boats which were sunk during the night have been particularly fortunate, returning from every trip with full fares.

The trick of sinking the five net boats was turned sometime between 6 o'clock last night and 2:30 a. m. Five boats had been brought into the slip from a fruitful trip. They were filled with fish, which were to be sold to-day. The mischief makers took a time for their work which would do the most damage, not only sinking the boats but causing loss of the big catches.

The crews of the five sunken boats, aided by some of their companion "netters," labored fiercely to get their craft to the surface. It was first thought that the plugs had been knocked out from the bottom of the boats, but it was finally found that the plugs were intact. So the boats must have been gradually filled by pumping water into them till they slipped beneath the surface and sank to the bottom of the water.

Engines Are Crippled.

When the boats were finally raised the owners were further exasperated to find that parts of the engines were missing. This was the last straw. Latin fury, always subject to quick release, broke forth afresh.

T wharf by this time was a swirl of gesticulating, shouting fishermen. The usual 200 men of the dory fleet was augmented to double that number by spectators, the regular number of hangers-on and friends of the disputants.

The racket brought three of the wharf police from Hanover street station. The police let the fishermen argue among themselves and denounce one another all they wished. So long as no actual violence occurred no arrests were made.

LEAGUE NAMES STRAIGHT TICKET; SMASH BOTH MACHINES, IS SLOGAN

John J. Hopper Nominated for Governor, William Randolph Hearst for Lieutenant Governor.

NEW YORK, Oct. 8.—

FOR GOVERNOR—John J. Hopper of New York.

FOR LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR—William Randolph Hearst of New York.

FOR SECRETARY OF STATE—Thomas P. Scully of Oneida.

FOR COMPTROLLER—Arnold B. M'Stay of New York.

FOR STATE TREASURER—William Irving Sirovick of New York.

FOR ATTORNEY-GENERAL—Robert Stewart of Kings.

FOR STATE ENGINEER AND SURVEYOR—James A. Lee of Rockland.

FOR JUDGES OF THE COURT OF APPEALS—Reuben Robie Lyon of Stuben, James A. Allen of New York.

This is the full straight Independence League State ticket.

It was completed last night at an unbossed convention at Webster Hall amid great enthusiasm and pledges of heartiest support.

John J. Hopper having been already nominated for Governor, and William Randolph Hearst for Lieutenant-Governor, seven places remained to be filled.

Practically every candidate selected was chosen with unanimity, except Secretary of State. A spirited contest developed between the adherents of Dr. D. W. Fenimore of St. Lawrence and Dr. William Irving Sirovick of this city. Sirovick finally won by an overwhelming majority.

To Smash Machines.

In every utterance and demonstration throughout the proceedings the wisdom of repudiating any proffered deals with Root or Murphy was commended and emphasized.

The sentiment was "we all go it alone and smash both machines" was all pervading.

Owing to the Cooper Union, where the first convention had been held, had been leased by others, it became necessary last night to procure another hall. It was at first believed that the league headquarters at the Park Avenue Hotel would furnish accommodations for delegates and alternates at least. It soon developed, however, and there was little room for the 450 odd representatives. So at the eleventh hour Webster Hall in East Eleventh ssreet was engaegd.

As the convention was about to adjourn, Clarence J. Shearn was recognized by Mr. Limberg, the chairman. Mr. Shearn said:

"I thought you would all like to have a word from Mr. Hearst before the convention adjourned. I asked him if he would not come down to-night and appear before you if possible. He was not able to do so, but when I asked him if he would not send some word to the boys in the the convention he consented, and I have just received a message from him which I will read."

Mr. Shearn's announcement was received with cheers, the delegates rising and cheering for several minutes. Mr. Shearn was interrupted repeatedly as he read Mr. Hearst's statement.

When he reached the point in which Mr. Hearst said, "What kind of a radical reformer is it who takes for himself the small position of temporary chairman and purposely places this 'root of all evil' in the conspicuous position of permanent chairman?" the convention arose again as one man and cheered heartily.

"It looks as if the chief was fully prepared for the fray," said Mr. Shearn before he resumed reading Mr. Hearst's message whereupon the convention broke out into a new demonstration which lasted for more than three minutes.

League Ticket the Only Progressive-W. R. Hearst

The following statement was sent by William Randolph Hearst last night to the State convention of the Independence League in Webster Hall:

"Fellow delegates to the Independence League Convention:

"I am exceedingly sorry that I was not with you as a delegate last Wednesday to vote for the adoption of your splendidly progressively platform, to vote for the nomination for Governor of John Jacob Hopper and to add my vote to yours in favor of a straight Independence League ticket. I wrote lately: 'My preference is always for a straight Independence League ticket, but I have sacrificed my preferences whenever two progressives tickets would merely have divided the progressive vote.'

"I say to-night that I would have sacrificed my preferences again if I had felt that our straight ticket would do nothing better than divide the progressive vote.

"But on the contrary I am confident that our straight ticket will unite the progressive vote under the banner of the Independence League. Our straight ticket will give progressives the only opportunity that they will have in this campaign to vote for a platform that sincerely expresses their ideas and for candidates that honestly represent their principles. Our straight ticket offers the only refuge to the progressive citizens, who were shrewdly tricked in the Republican convention and boldly driven out of the Democratic convention.

"I believe that the people generally have come to understand the combination that exists between both of the old parties on behalf of the privileged interests and I believe that your convention will be heartily thanked by all patriotic citizens, regardless of party, for the opportunity that it has again given the public to repudiate a corrupt political compact.

"I do not think that any Democrat is so innocent and trustful as to imagine that a Democratic convention firmly held in the greasy grip of Boss Murphy could be honestly opposed to boss dictation and corporation corruption.

"Without boss dictation there would not be anything for Murphy to do, and without corporation corruption there would not be anything for Murphy to take.

"I do not think that any Republican is so childlike and confiding as to believe that a convention directed by Elihu Root could possibly be opposed to the criminal trusts or to the evil alliance between unscrupulous interests and purchasable politicians.

"Can the man who defended Tweed become the foe of corrupt bosses? Can the man who represented Ryan become the enemy of corporation corruption?

"What kind of a radical reform Republican convention is it in which Mr. Roosevelt occupies the little position of temporary chairman and Mr. Root the big position of permanent chairman?

"I say it is a temporarily radical and a permanently reactionary Republican convention.

"What kind of a radical reformer is it who takes for himself that small position of temporary chairman and purposely places this 'root of all evil' in the conspicuous position of permanent chairman?

"I say it is a temporarily radical and a permanently temporizing, compromising, trimming, fradulent reformer.

"What kind of a Jeffersonian Democratic convention is it where the word of a Tammany boss is substituted for the Democratic method of majority rule, where a ticket named by secret influences in a back room pretends to represent the Democratic idea of equal rights for all, special privileges for none?

"I say there was not an old-fashioned, genuine Democratic thought or method in all of this late so-called Democratic convention and that there is hardly one sincere Democratic candidate on all of this so-called Democratic ticket.

"I say that this Democratic ticket is a ticket of reactionary bolters and Tammany traitors, rewarded through their present preferment for past disloyalty to Democratic candidates and persistent betrayal of Democratic principles. I do not see how any honest Jeffersonian Democrat can support this false Democratic ticket.

"I do not see how any sincere progressive Republican can support this fraudulent Republican ticket. The Independence League has done exactly as it pledged itself to do. It has made an honest effort to support progressive principles and progressive candidates regardless of party, and, having failed to find them in the old parties, it has bravely determined to make an independent campaign of its own. I think that you may adjourn to-night confident that you have done your patriotic duty, and confident, too, that all honest, earnest citizens will appreciate your action and will in their turn do their duty at the polls.

WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST.

Complete Harmony Prevails at New York Convention and Hearty Support Is Pledged.

Mr. Hearst's reference to Boss Murphy, and his absolute domination of the Rochester convention was cheered with equal earnestness, and the chairman was twice forced to appeal for order that the reading of the message might continue.

Chairman Herbert R. Limberg called together as many delegates as could squeeze into the league headquarters merely to listen to a motion to take a recess and resume proceedings at Webster Hall.

It was nearly 9 p. m. when the vanguard arrived at the hall. Regularly elected delegates found the entrance [illegible] with a crowd which may have hailed from Fourteenth street claiming seats, but bearing no authorized claim to them.

Sergeant-at-arms Hanshee and a corps of deputies had been instructed to admit none but those who presented credentials and tickets. A squad of police finally succeeded in driving off the would-be invaders, but they delayed the calling to order of the convention for nearly an hour.

The hall was packed within a few minutes after legally elected delegates and alternates were admitted. Then the doors were closed to prevent further intrusion.

Out of the Beaten Path

Uncle Sam Gets Indian Beer.

LOS ANGELES, Oct. 8.—Antonio Apache, Harvard graduate and art connoisseur, was not allowed to buy a glass of beer in a local saloon because he is an Indian. Apache insisted on having a glass of beer, but his demands availed nothing, and he turned to Uncle Sam in his trouble. The federal authorities assured him that as he is a voter he is entitled to beer just as much as any one. Accompanied by United States Marshal Leo Youngworth, he returned to the saloon and got his beer.

Smokes with Legs Cut Off.

YOUNGSTOWN, O., Oct. 8.—A B. & O freight crew near Lowellville found Thomas Perry of Lincoln, Neb., sitting with a leg in each hand. His legs had been cut off below the knees. The trip here was made in fifteen minutes, during which time Perry smoked cigarettes. Perry had lain for six hours alongside the track after dragging himself for nearly a quarter of a mile.

Name on Egg Finds Husband.

Jack Brindle, away up in Pennsylvania, happened to see the egg and wrote a postcard and got an answer, and their wedding followed.

Ant Armies Fight to Death.

CHARDON, O., Oct. 8.—On South Hambdenn street a battle between great armies of ants was fought. A stretch of walk six feet long was covered with thousands of the combatants, which paired off and fought to the death with the ferocity of bulldogs. Hundreds of the little insects pursued their opponents up a maple tree and fell on the sidewalk in struggling pairs.

Trades Job with Wife.

TOLEDO, O., Oct. 8.—Fifteen days after Mr. and Mrs. Otto Snyder of this city exchanged jobs, the husband tired of the bargain and was glad to go back to his own position. Snyder is a rural mail carrier working out of East Toledo. Mrs. Snyder was engaged on the route for two weeks, Mr. Snyder staying at home washing dishes, sweeping floors and scrubbing.

Snake Routs College Class.

HARTFORD, Ct., Oct. 8.—A fourteen-inch garter snake appearing suddenly in a classroom at Trinity College threw the class into disorder and gave some of the students a good scare before it finally wriggled out of the room to the campus where it was killed. While Professor Kleene was lecturing on economics the snake crawled from a hole in the wall.

First Ice Water Fatal.

BARTLESVILLE, Okla., Oct. 8.—Franz Plonka is dead here as a result of too deep a quaff of his first artificial ice water. He arrived in this country from Poland six days ago and began work at Smelter No. 2. At first he was shy of trying ice water, but at noon drank a quart at his lunch. He died in three hours.

MALDEN BOY WHOSE ABSENCE HAS MADE MOTHER VERY ILL

RICHARD J. DELANEY

MOTHER VAINLY CALLS FOR SON

Worry over the disappearance of her son is responsible for the serious illness of the mother of Richard J. Delaney, a Malden boy who disappeared from his home, No. 108 Highland avenue, in that city, three weeks ago last Sunday night. At times Mrs. Delaney is delirious, and she calls constantly for her son. Relatives have appealed to the BOSTON AMERICAN for aid in locating the young man.

The youth is sixteen years old. The Sunday that he left home he told his mother that he was going to church service in the Church of the Immaculate Conception in Malden. He has not been seen since.

Delaney is described as five feet eight inches tall, light complexioned, freckled, sandy hair and hazel eyes. He wore when he left home a dark blue suit, gray cap and patent leather shoes.

"WOMEN DON'T THINK," SAYS MRS. RICKER

Marilla Ricker of Dover, N. H., Washington, D. C., late of California, lawyer, suffragist and politician, stopped in Boston on her way to Dover, where she will run for the governorship of the Granite State.

In an interview here she said:

"I haven't taken my personal campaign too seriously. I sent my $100 to the secretary of State, to register my intention to run for the office, and they refused to accept the money, the legal authorities of the State holding that a woman has no right to run for the office.

"But my attorney, who has been acting for me during my absence, has found a law which grants to anyone who can get 1,000 voters to sign a petition, the right to run for the office. The last I knew I had more than 500 signatures on my petition. I think I shall run.

"My action may be the beginning of a real chance in the future for women in this part of the country to think and act for themselves. The women of today do not think for themselves. New England is far behind the times. New Englanders say a lot about progressiveness, but they do not progress as fast as they talk.

"But I love New England and am glad to be here as much as the climate will allow. I like to be on the firing line, and so I shall go to Washington, I expect, for the Winter.

"In speaking of the backwardness of the women I want to say one thing, although it may not be a popular view, and people may say hard things about me for my opinion.

"The churches have always been behind in everything and for that reason women always having been more closely allied with the churches than have the men—the churches have been more detrimental to women than any adverse influence. Women must learn to speak for themselves.

"Women and preachers have always led in prayer. But people who lead in prayer seldom lead in anything else. Prayer won't change the world or reform the people. Good living, kind deeds and clean thinking may.

"A steeple is no more to be excluded from taxation than the smokestack. Churches should pay for the money making concession—the privilege of being in business."

FACULTY EDICT STIRS SENIORS AT WELLESLEY

WELLESLEY, Oct. 8.—Wellesley College seniors are stirred by the edict of the faculty to the effect that gymnasium work is required of every girl. The edict is made that this compulsory course will stop all preparations for outdoor athletics.

Miss Amy Homans, director of gymnastics, has announced that the course will count for a degree. The seniors assert that with other social duties, and study periods, this work will leave no time for any of them to go out for the athletic teams.

They also resent Miss Homans' statement to the effect that the Wellesley graduate of the future would have a perfect figure and complexion, maintaining that this will lead an outsider to believe there are girls in the college who lack these requisites for a degree.

"The question is do we want outdoor sports or academic athletics?" is the way in which Kate Parsons, '11, sums up the issue at stake.

"We want outdoor sports, but there is so much of academic athletics we have no time for them," is the way the seniors say they feel about the matter.

HANOVER, N. H., Oct. 8.—A snappy game, well illustrating the advantage of the new rules, is looked for in to-day's gridiron clash of Dartmouth and Colby.

Coach Randall of Dartmouth expects a very interesting and fast game. The Colby team arrived at Hanover with Coach Harry McDavitt, '07, who is a former Dartmouth quarterback, and practiced on the campus.

Several Dartmouth coaches arrived in town to-day, including Dr. Charles Whalen and Reggie Bankhart, a guard of the '08 team. They will watch the game closely and intend staying at Hanover several days to assist Head Coach Randall.

Captain Ryan will not play in the Colby game. Additions to the training table were Johnson and Lovejoy. Two games are played at the oval, as the freshmen will face Vermont Academy prior to the big game.

THERE'S no man for the army but a soldier, and there is no substitute for resiliency in a rubber heel.

Chunks of wood or iron or other foreign substance from time to time have been suggested to me to introduce into the rubber heel. You can save rubber by introducing them, but you destroy the resiliency—the true mission of the rubber heel.

The mission of the rubber heel is to supply nature's want and it requires live rubber and all rubber to make a rubber heel supersede a leather heel.

The trade and the public like O'Sullivan's LIVE Rubber Heels because their standard is always like Sterling in silver—dependable, durable, and the price is 50c the country over.

By E. V. B. PARKE.

Harvard and Williams line up against each other on the gridiron in the Stadium this afternoon at 3 o'clock. The Crimson warriors are looking forward to one of the hardest struggles of the season, for despite the poor showing which Williams made in the first game with Rensselaer Tech, in which neither team scored, the wearers of the royal purple have been coming fast during the past week, and are now, according to all accounts from the little town up among the Berkshires, playing a first-class article of the pigskin-chasing game.

Has Snappy Backfield.

The Williams team, with six veterans from last year's eleven, is of the kind which is admirably suited to this style of play, and the game to-day will undoubtedly be featured by many open plays of various descriptions. Both of the ends are exceptionally fast. The backfield—Peterson, Prindle and Stevens—all gave ample evidence of their speed in the contest last year. The Williams line, while a fairly heavy one, is also on its toes all of the time, this being strongly illustrated in the game last Saturday with Union.

The Harvard team, on the other hand, will present its strongest possible line-up, all of the regulars now being in fit condition for any kind of a mix-up. As the team goes into the game to-day so it will more than likely face Yale at the end of the season, barring mishaps. Both Corbett and Wigglesworth will be back in the line-up, and this fact alone will aid in giving greater life to a team which from present indications gives evidence of being the best that the Harvard coaches have put on the gridiron for many years.

In the two games which the Crimson has already played it has been evident to the most unsophisticated of football fans that the team which represents Harvard this year is far ahead of the teams at this time in former years and possesses a line and backfield which can hardly be equalled by any college eleven to-day. Larger scores have been piled up against the Harvard opponents so far this season than in seasons before, and these opponents have at least had as good teams if not better than in previous years.

The Harvard team has mastered the science of interference, and in a degree has succeeded with the forward pass, and she also has discovered in Frothingham a drop-kicker of rare ability when consistent performances along this line are considered.

Hard-Fought Contest To-Day.

As has been said before, the game this afternoon gives promise of being an open contest, hard fought from beginning to end, with a fighting chance for Williams—but only a fighting chance. While Harvard looks forward to a hard contest it also expects at least three scores and possibly more.

The Harvard team had a comparatively easy time of it yesterday afternoon, its work not lasting over three-quarters of an hour, and consisting mainly of running through signals and a little practice of the dummy variety.

Head Coach Haughton was on the field in citizen's clothes after having been laid up for three days with a slight illness, and although he gave a few directions to the team, the practice was still in charge of Coach "Johnny" Cutler.

In the "dummy" practice, the 'varsity and their subs lined up against each other, running through formations, but no tackling or excessive rough-house was allowed, the idea of the work being mainly to coach the men on their respective positions in each play.

Will Depend on Forward Pass.

The backfields were changed frequently, but in the main the 'varsity was made up as it plays to-day. A great deal of time was spent on the forward pass, which, by the way, makes it look as though this play was to be greatly depended upon to-day, training the 'varsity linemen to break through and also to cover up all possible spots where the pass may be caught for the backfield. The tackles and backs were also shown the proper positions when on the defensive punt formation.

The great trouble with all the quarterbacks in delivering the forward pass seemed to be that the ball was passed too low, not giving the catchers time to get under the spheroid. The coaches labored some time on this point, and finally Wigglesworth got off some pretty passes to Frothingham and Smith.

Both of these men seem particularly apt in handling the ball on this play, and can receive it in almost any position. A good deal of time was also taken up with the direct pass, and onside kick.

Following this dummy practice the team as it lines up to-day ran through signals for some time, and were then dismissed.

"Ham" Fish Watches Work.

"Ham" Fish, captain of the team last year, was on the field yesterday watching the practice, which Coaches Blagden, Leary and Cutting assisted Cutler in drilling the team.

"Hooks" Burr, captain of the Crimson team two years ago, is very ill with typhoid fever, having been laid up now for the past week, and his condition is regarded as serious. It is now only the seventh day of his sickness and his temperature is 103, causing great worry to his relatives and friends. It is needless to say that he was unable to aid Coach Haughton in his work on Soldier's Field again this season, and the staff will lose one of its most valuable coaches for this season through his illness.

HOUCK CONFIDENT HE CAN DEFEAT QUILL

It is some guess to decide who will win the bout between Leo Houck and Tommy Quill at the Armory Club next Tuesday. It is a meeting where the club members are sure of witnessing some fast and rugged work, and everyone seems to agree it will be one of the best bouts staged locally.

Quill is very confident of victory, and if he wins intends to challenge the country to box him at the welterweight championship limit, 142 pounds at 3 o'clock. He is conceding weight to Houck next Tuesday night, but believes he can do so and win over the strong built Pennsylvanian. Three fast six-round bouts will also be decided, making the entertainment an enjoyable one.

BOSTON CLUB SHOWS HIGH BRED TERRIERS

NEW YORK, Oct. 8.—Slim dogs, chunky dogs, heavy dogs, light dogs, straight-tailed dogs and dogs with kinks in their tails, but dogs all of high degrees, made things howl at Madison Square Garden today. In the concert hall of the famous structure the Boston Terrier Club of New York held a special exhibition. And it was a fine show.

The champions Oarsman and Miss Anthonie, who typify the best of the old-style Boston terrier, but which have the earmarks of the bulldog rather than the terrier, will be pitted againsts The Demon in the rings. Dr. Mountain, who is acting as judge, decides which exemplifies the true type of the breed.

32 CARS TO START IN BIG AUTO RACE

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 8.—The third annual 200-mile automobile race over the Fairmount Park course starts this noon. Thirty-two of the fastest cars in the country, including five of the first nine to finish in the Vanderbilt cup race, compete. They have been divided into five classes, according to their piston displacement. A prize of $1,000 and a trophy given by the city of Philadelphia will be awarded to the winner in each class and a grand prize of $2,500 will be awarded to the car which covers the course in the shortest time. Three thousand police will guard the course.

CARRUTH BOWLERS BEAT BOYLSTON FIVE

The Carruth bowling team of the Greater Boston League, on the home alleys, took the Boylston five into camp with three to one for a final score. The Hanover street squad rolled in superb style, every member contributing fine figures. In the total pin count, Carruth led by ten pins, while the first and last strings were won by good margins. Boylston rolled a fine box in its second string, falling but one to the rear of the 500 mark.

SAYS VETERANS THE SPEEDIER BASERUNNERS

"There's a world of difference between the old-time baserunners and the young players of to-day," remarked Hughey Duffy, manager of the White Sox, as he watched one of his new recruits, trying to make a dextrous slide, bring up with the ball awaiting him. "Somehow or other, the boys don't go round as they used to, or make a study of scienced base-thieving as they did twenty years ago. Cobb, Collins and Bescher steal bases, plenty of them. They combine a maximum of sheer speed with the best of judgment as to making a start. Too many of the modern players are way slow in starting, and too many others depend entirely on the man at bat. I've seen certain big league players—never mind their names—actually looking at the plate and the batsman as they ran—as if a man could run fast and watch the plate at the same time.

"The men of twenty years ago studied the fine points and the tricks of baserunning. Take Tommy McCarthy, for instance. After a game we'd all sit on the clubhouse steps, if it was a warm, pleasant evening, instead of making a hurried getaway for home. Then McCarthy would say: 'Seems to me a second baseman would never get the ball down on a man who wriggled to the right and threw both feet out of the diamond, while reaching for the bag with just one hand.' And we'd argue it pro and con, then start some other discussion as to the best way of coming into third without offering anything for the baseman to tag. In those days, we made a specialty, not of the wild footfirst, spike-armed slide they use to-day, but of coming down to the base head-on, but not blindly. We would throw our bodies out of the way and spear the bag with the tips of the fingers, with nothing but a hand to tag. Now, if you even suggest going that way, the youngsters would declare that they would break their necks against the baseman's leg—and they would, a good many of them.

"Billy Sunday, Arlie Latham and Billy Hamilton were very fast runners, and could have made records in a 100-yard dash. They combined intelligence with their speed—they knew when to start, how to get up full speed and how to slide when they arrived."

SIZES UP OPPONENT, THEN SNEAKS AWAY

NEW YORK, Oct. 8.—"Fighting Joe" Hyland was scheduled to box Joe Phillips in the star bout of ten rounds at the Lehigh A. C. last night, but after visiting the club and seeing his prospective adversary Hyland developed a severe case of "cold feet" and sneaked out through a side door, after explaining that he did not think he was in condition.

"I was so badly beaten by K. O. Brown at the Olympic A. C. on Monday that I haven't gotten over it yet," explained Hyland, "and if Phillips whips me it will look bad, and the local clubs will not consider me a drawing card any more."

ANDOVER, Oct. 8.—Phillips Andover battles Cushing Academy on Brothers Field to-day.

For the first time since the schools assumed athletic relations Cushing defeated Andover, 6 to 0, in the opening game of the season last year, and will try to score another victory this year.

On paper the teams are well matched. Andover defeated Lowell Textile School, 43 to 0, and Cushing won from the same team by 46 to 0. Cushing has been beaten, 12 to 5, by Exeter, and to-day's game will afford the first opportunity of comparing the strength of Andover and Exeter.

Andover will send its strongest team into the field, but will also give many substitutes a tryout before the game is over.

NEW HAVEN, Oct. 8.—Yale and Holy Cross clash here to-day and all indications point to an easy victory for the Eli eleven, although Holy Cross has hopes of at least scoring on the New Haven warriors.

The coaches are saving several of the men, but are giving the men who are on the varsity squad this year for the first time a chance in the game. Childs, who was ineligible last year, starts the game at right tackle. In his first game, that against Tufts, he made a very good impression and seems sure to make the varsity eleven unless he is injured.

Francis, who has played in the tackle and halfback positions, is not in the game to-day, unless there is absolute need of a kicker. The coaches are saving him.

Two other men who will not play are Captain Daly, halfback, and Kilpatrick, end. Coates will play in place of Kilpatrick. Deming will take Captain Daly's place at left halfback and will do the punting. Kistler will be at right half and Philbin will do the line-plunging from fullback.

Injured Men Recovering.

The two new ends, Coates and Reilly, played very good games against Tufts and seem sure to be first substitutes for their positions, the regulars being Bomeisler and Kilpatrick.

The injured men on the Yale eleven are all doing well. Howe will be back in the game at quarterback next week, and Bomeisler may be able to play at end in the West Point game. Fields' shoulder is dislocated and it is a question if he can play before the last games.

Otherwise the members of the squad are in pretty good shape, except Bernie Commers, the Yale pitcher, who has been injured in football practice and whose arm probably will not be in such shape that he can pitch in the spring.

The Holy Cross team, unfortunate in getting dates for preliminary football games, goes against Yale without knowing its own strength. Coach Timothy F. Larkin had the varsity team against the second team every day this week and feels confident Holy Cross will score on Yale, as "Hiker" Joy is an exceptional kicker and he is counted on to score a goal from field. At any rate he has been practicing that play and feels sure he can get one in on Yale.

Jim O'Brien, half back, and Metivier, end, both from Rindge Manual Training school, have played a fast game, and with Cannon, former Roxbury High boy, are expected to do some good work. Holy Cross expects Yale to pile up a big score but the Worcester boys want to get a score on the Yale eleven.

This is the opening game for Holy Cross and the squad has worked hard to make a good showing against the stonewall line of the Eli squad.

The forward pass and the onside kick will be used extensively in the game, and several open plays have been planned. "Hiker" Joy has trained for the drop kick, so that if the Purple gets the ball within striking distance, Holy Cross may have a score to its credit.

JOHNNY KLING BIG FACTOR IN CUBS' SUCCESS

John Kling, backstopping genius, had a heap to do with the 1910 pennant march of Chance's four-time champion Cubs. And thereby hangs a tale. Anxious fans doubted the ability of the veteran to "come back" after a year of the simple life. No such fear ever attacked Kling.

On the contrary, speaking without the faintest display of egotism, Johnny predicted a great year—one of the best of his long career. And right from the outset he proceeded to make good this prophecy.

Up to the time that he hurt his leg the Kansas City pool shark had worn the big mit, the mask and windpad in eighty-six games, had roped in 394 put-outs, 117 assists and committed but ten errors. The bulk of these fielding bobbles were executed early in the season—that is, after he reported May 8. Almost from the beginning of his 1910 service Kling re-asserted his swatting proclivities. He would have played a stellar role in the world's series but for his injury.

There With Warclub.

Kling's warclub lost none of its former power despite its year of inactivity. Take a peek at his record. Going to bat 290 times in 87 games, the catching marvel suspended a record of 84 hits including a raft of extra base knocks delivered at timely stages. All season the veteran had combed the horsehide to remote sections of the playing field for a total of 112 bases, yet he had been in little more than half the games that some of his teammates have played.

The sterling efforts of the West Side idol were not confined to catching, hitting or nipping hostile base runners, either. Back again among his old pals Kling devoted all his time to the interests of the club, and no small measure of praise given King Cole for his great pitching record this season is due our old friend Johnny. True, the slab sensation of the year was started on his dash toward the top of the heap by that expert sharp-shooter and bane to base runners, Jimmy Archer, but Kling contributed a deal of valuable work in polishing the rough edges off the Bay City discovery.

Vacation days were few and far between for Kling once he regained his true playing form, but he never flinched or complained. When Manager Chance was forced out of the game owing to injuries and Archer was yanked from the catching department to substitute on first base the burden of the catching was heaped upon Johnny. He worked cheerfully, double-headers finding him on the job in the same, quiet demeanor that has always stamped him a credit to the national pastime. They're going to miss Johnnie in the world's series, that's a safe bet.

BALL-PLAYER FOUND THROUGH WANT AD

CHICAGO, Oct. 8.—Dave Altizer, drafted from Minneapolis by the Cincinnati Reds, bears the dintinction of being the only ball player who has been "found" through a newspaper want ad. When Altizer takes the field with the Reds in Cincinnati he will mark up score No. 1 for newspaper advertising and give Jimmy Callahan cause to feel relieved.

Griffith couldn't locate Altizer and wired Callahan to insert an "ad" for the player. This was done and in the early hours of the morning some unknown person called Callahan and gave him Dave's telephone number. Callahan called Altizer, but Dave thought it a joke until word from Griffith confirming the report that he was "wanted" was received.

How Cubs and Athletics Line Up
SHECKARD vs. LORD in Left Field

This is one of a series of articles comparing the individual players of the Cubs and Athletics. It is written by the baseball writer of the Chicago American, who has watched the Cubs at short range.

By Bill Bailey.

IF Jimmy Sheckard doesn't outplay one B. Lord, the Athletic outfielder, in the big World Series between the Cubs and the Philadelphia Americans, then there will be a lot of surprised fans in Chicago.

For it sure is difficult to find any dope that would give the Athletic outfielder an edge on Sheckard.

"Ah," say you, "Sheckard is a veteran."

And what of it? Age on a ball field is not counted by years. What availeth an athlete if he is but twenty years, and be without speed? And what handicap is age if a man be fleet of foot? True, he may not be next year or the year after, and age is bound to tell in time. But just now we are discussing an event that will begin on October 17, and not years hence.

There is but one department in the game where any figures can be found which will give Lord the best of it. That is with the war club.

And the difference there is so very slight that it can scarcely be said that the Philadelphian has anything on the Chicagoan.

Lord right now is batting .254. Sheckard is clouting .252.

A difference of two points on the season. Small? Of course the difference is small.

Sheckard Is Faster Than Lord.

Now when it comes to speed Sheckard has it all over his rival. Lord so far has pilfered eleven bases. That certainly is some record. The trouble with that record is that it is the kind that would convict a man instead of vindicating him.

No, sir. If Lord secures an increase in pay next year it will not be because of his work on the bases. Sheckard has been just twice as effective on the base paths. For James Tilden has swiped twenty-two so far this year.

Out on the West Side of Chicago you often hear Sheckard referred to as "Sacrifice Jim." That's because he does so much of the bunting. You know with Evers leading off and Sheckard coming up second a pitcher certainly has his troubles. It's questionable whether there are two better men in the league to have at the top of a batting order. Evers is a great man to get on base and Sheckard is a great man to send him to second.

There are a lot of fans who believe that Sheckard has been doing so much bunting that his batting has suffered as a result. For in years gone by Sheckard was a real slugger.

One of the beauties of Sheckard is that he has a great eye. You have to put that ball over the plate if you expect him to go after it. Nothing near the plate will suffice.

Ball Must Cut the Plate.

"It must be over some corner of that pan or square over the centre. As a result he very frequently has Mr. Pitcher in the hole. And then look out. The outfielders are likely to have something to do.

There are might few men who get the pitcher in the hole with three and two as often as does Sheckard.

Sheckard is closing a mighty good year. When the cold winds of Autumn blew last year Sheckard was in bad with the Chicago fans. He was traded all Winter long. The majority of the wise ones thought that Chance would surely let him go. But they were mistaken. And now they probably are glad that they were. For Sheckard has played a dandy game this Summer.

Sheckard enjoys the distinction of having been held at higher price han any other man in the game.

And here is the story: When Murphy took charge of the Cubs he was out to make the team a pennant winner. So he went to Chance and asked him what ball-players he would like to have. Sheckard was one of them.

"Well," said the new owner, "I'm going to New York. I'll try to get Sheckard. Who will I offer?"

"Well, Maloney," began Chance.

"Maloney?" queried Murphy. "Why, the last time I saw him in Chicago, the fans were presenting him with a gold handled umbrella."

"Yes, I know," from Chance, "but give them Maloney and Casey," and he named three others.

"All for Sheckard?" queried Murphy.

"All for Sheckard."

So Murphy went to New York. He communicated with Ebbetts and told him he wanted Sheckard and, of course, Ebbetts said that James was not for sale and could not be traded for. They all hand that out when you want one of their ball players. Just the same Ebbetts was curious and wanted to know what all he could get for Sheckard. And Murphy enumerated.

Well, Ebbetts sought advice. Among those whom he consulted was President Brush of the New York club. Brush also wanted Sheckard and he told the Brooklyn owner to find out what Murphy valued the five players at and if the figures were within reason that he would give him as much in cash.

So Ebbetts went to Murphy and asked what the players would cost if they were purchased. I think Murphy valued Maloney at something like $5,000 and Casey at a like amount.

At any rate when the list was completed it developed that Murphy was willing to dispose of the quintette at something like $25,000, or one-fourth the amount the entire ball club, franchise and all, had cost him.

Thereby placing the same valuation upon Sheckard, for Murphy was willing and even eager to give the entire bunch for Sheckard. Well, Ebbetts sought some more advice. Barney Dreyfuss was among the last named.

"Would you let him go?" queried Ebbetts of the Pittsburg magnate.

"For that bunch?" queried Barney. "Sure. It's a shame to take a man's ball club away from a young fellow like Murphy, though," chuckled Barney.

Murphy Gets Sheckard.

The trade was completed at the wrong end of the Brooklyn bridge, for Murphy was afraid that if Ebbetts once got in New York proper, that he would be dissuaded. And Sheck was a Cub.

This fellow Sheckard is one of the greatest men in the game when it comes to playing inside baseball.

You take him at the plate with Evers on first base and you never know what he will attempt. He will pull the hit and run when you expect the bunt. He will put the ball down when you look for the hit and run. He will wait the pitcher out. He will do any one of a dozen things that a smart ball player will.

It's doubtful whether there is a man in the National League who knows the batters of his own organization quite as well. Artie Hofman says that he is so keen on a trail that he can tell where a man is likely to hit after seeing him at bat one time. This much is certain. He usually has the right dope on the fellows at the plate.

Sheckard's great specialty is sliding after line drives and cutting off base hits. He surely is without an equal in this.

From Philadelphia come reports that R. Lord is not even sure of a place in the world's series lineup. Down there they say that Connie Mack is doing considerable worrying about the slowness of his outfielders and that 'twould not be surprising to see Strunk, a youngster, playing left field.

Here is one of the unfortunates of the game.

Strunk looked like a whirlwind in the Spring. He was clouting the ball at a great rate and was dashing around the bases at a terrific pace. Then he injured himself and has been out of it ever since. He would be all right physically to go into the game. And it would not be at all surprising to see him guarding left field when the whistle blew for the first contest.

Mack's idea would be to speed up his outfield.

Even last year when the fans were finding fault with Sheckard they made no criticism of his fielding and he was one of the most finished men in the outfield to-day. It's difficult to find a weakness. He can come in on fly balls. He can go to either side of him. And better still, he can go back and pull down flies.

Sheckard has been in the big leagues a long time. It was fourteen years ago that he first played with the big fellows. He spent but one season in the minors and then he was grabbed by the Baltimore club. He then went to Brooklyn and remained there until the Cubs secured him.

One of the strange features of Sheck's career was that he was touted as a bad actor by the friends of Manager Chance. Both the manager and the president of the Cubs were told that Sheckard was a man who spread dissention in a ball club. They didn't believe it for the reason that Chance had known the outfielder for several years.

Sheckard was attracted to Chance in a peculiar way. The year before Sheck became a member of the Chicago West Side band he and Chance indulged in a fight for the base stealing honors that will live long in the memory of baseball players. The two were taking desperate chances in an effort to outdo the other. When the season came to a close neither Chance nor Sheck had a great deal of skin left on their right legs. But Chance figured that a man who was as game as Sheck was would make a good man on a ball club.

Although Lord is twenty-seven years of age he has not been in the big leagues a great while. In the year of 1903 he was with the Upland semi-professional club and the next found him with the Lancaster team of the Tri-State organization. He was transferred to the Coatsville Club and Connie Mack picked him in in 1903. He was later released to the New Orleans club and remained there until he was picked up by the Cleveland team. It was from the Naps that Connie Mack secured him. The trade was made early this year and Lord replaced Topsy Hartsel.

In summing up you would have to give the pick to the Chicago man.

WORLD SERIES ANNOUNCEMENT

AN important announcement relative to the results in the world series baseball games will be found in the Boston Sunday American.

OVERALL MAY OPEN WORLD'S SERIES GAMES

CINCINNATI, O., Oct. 8.—Manager Chance of the Cubs says that he is satisfied with the schedule for the world's series.

"It makes no difference to us where we start," he answered. 'We will play just as good ball at the Athletics' park as on our own field. The boys are seasoned to foreign crowds, and they are as clever on the road as at home. Of course, I do not like those over-night jumps, and neither do any of the players; but, if they must have them, we realize that they are just as fair for one club as the other, so they will not handicap us any more than the Athletics, who will be on the same train.

"I am confident that we will win the series. Brown is in better shape than he has been this season, and will give a good account of himself. So will Ed. Ruelbach.

"Overall is uncertain. Some days his arm feels fine, and other days it bothers him a good deal. If he is right, there will be nothing to it. If he is good and ready, I shall use him in the first game of the series, and probably follow with Brown in the second, leaving Ruelbach to pitch the first game in Chicago.

"I am going to send both Brown and Overall into one more game apiece before the series to give them a good work-out, but shall not work either of them more than once.

"I expect to get into the lineup myself within a day or two, for I must get some work to be in shape for the series. I think my leg is going to stand up all right. It is better than it was, and I hope that it will not go back on me.

"I will probably start playing on Saturday at Pittsburg, and continue every day if I do not get hurt again. In case I cannot play in the series I shall feel perfectly confident of Jimmy Archer being able to hold down the bag all right."

WHITE GAME, BUT NO MATCH FOR ABE

MILWAUKEE, Oct. 7.—Abe Attell had things his own way in his battle with Frankie White of Chicago and had Frankie's face pretty badly damaged at the finish. The Chicagoan was ready to take all that Attell could land and more, and was constantly coming back with an effort to find a way past the California youngster's almost impregnable guard.

The first eight rounds were Attell's. The ninth was White's by virtue of three stiff blows to the chin. Attell did not land effectively. The stiffest blows of the fight were exchanged in the last round. White put his right and left to Abe's nose, but Attell came back equally strong and drew blood. Attell's round.

Cobb Says Lajoie Is the Greatest Batter in the Game To-day.

By TY COBB.

DETROIT, Oct. 7.—A wonderful eyesight and wonderful physique are principally responsible for Lajoie's success as a batsman.

Larry has a good physique. He has the power needed behind a blow. He can make them count.

To-day you see in Lajoie one of the few remaining members of the old school—the school of sluggers. They have been passing fast, giving way to a new school that depends on a 'chop' instead of slugging.

I do not mean this to discredit Larry. He deserves the more credit for it. He stands to-day as one of the greatest batsmen the game has produced, running up a high average against the new school, slugging the ball where they are chopping it.

"The pitching to-day is far different than it used to be, but Larry is still able to wage war against modern pitching with old-fashioned batting methods. And there is no one coming out of the new school who looks to be his equal.

Cobb a Natural and Speedy Hitter, Says Lajoie of His Rival.

By NAPOLEON LAJOIE.

CLEVELAND, Oct. 7.—"To begin with, Cobb is a natural hitter. A man who is a hitter has to be so naturally. You may be able to give a man instructions on how to hold his bat or how to stand at the plate, but you can't convert him into a hitter if he is not one naturally.

"Cobb has the natural gift of meeting a ball. Cobb hit from the start of his career. Cobb has good eyesight.

No matter what you say to the contrary, a man with poor eyesight can't be a good hitter. You have to see a ball before you can meet it.

"He also has speed. He gets many hits because of his speed, beating out grounders. He relies on this speed to a certain extent. If he would be slower he would probably still bat at a high figure, for he would hit them out more.

"Another thing—he outguesses pitchers. He thinks quickly and he moves fast. I don't think he tries to place the balls—I know I don't; he just meets them."

NEW YORK, Oct. 8.—Announcement of the following contracts and releases has been made by President Lynch of the National League:

Note—Players Lumley and Fisher were released by Rochester to Brooklyn.

GOES TO OLYMPIC IF HE WINS RACE

WALLA WALLA, Wash., Oct. 8.—Bill Martin, the great sprinter from Notre Dame and the man who outran Nelson at the A. Y. P. meet a year ago, will represent the Seattle Athletic Association in the A. A. U. championships at New Orleans, from there to Chicago and then to New York to enter big meets. The Seattle association has promised to send him to the next Olympic in Sweden if he will represent them in these places this Fall.

CAMNITZ SAYS BONUS OF $12,000 DUE HIM

PITTSBURG, Oct. 8.—Barney Dreyfuss and Howard Camnitz of the Pirates are at odds over the question whether the pitcher has or has not earned $1,200 bonus money this season.

Dreyfuss holds that Camnitz has not lived up to his promise to keep himself always in condition for best work. Camnitz denies that he has overstepped the bounds which Dreyfuss laid out for him when his contract was signed and claims he is entitled to the $1,200.

ATTELL IS NOT ANXIOUS FOR PACKEY'S GAME

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 8.—Abe Attell, featherweight champion, is letting down the bars to all sorts of fighters. Abe made this plain in his training quarters when he said:

"So they have got me 'almost' matched with Packey McFarland, have they?" he queried, in between rounds with Danny Goodman. "That would be all right if Packey would make some sort of weight for me. Unless he does they might just as well drop all idea of such a match.

"They tell me McFarland won't make weight for anybody, not even for lightweights. If that's the case I pass him. I haven't gone completely crazy—not just yet, at any rate."

Managing Your Husband

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

DO YOU understand YOUR husband?

This vital question, raised by the pathetic letter of "A Helpless Wife," published in the BOSTON AMERICAN, has aroused the interest of married people all over New England.

Scores of letters giving advice to "A Helpless Wife" have been received. Some of them condemn, while others praise her.

In her letter, "A Helpless Wife" says she is unable to please her husband. She says she has cooked for him, waited on him, slaved for him for eighteen years, and that her reward now is absolute indifference on the part of her husband.

Can YOU solve her problem for her? If you believe you can, send your solution to Beatrice Fairfax, BOSTON AMERICAN.

Beatrice Fairfax, one of the BOSTON AMERICAN'S experts on affairs of the heart, discussed the plight of "A Helpless Wife," and gave it as her conclusion she had tried too hard to please her husband.

Ella Wheeler Wilcox, another of the BOSTON AMERICAN'S experts, takes up the question to-day. She takes it up from a strong philosophical point of view. Following is her article:

> To be loved, one must be lovable.
>
> The wife who longs to be able to understand her husband wants first to understand herself.
>
> A man can be laughed out of many moods where he cannot be reasoned out, or scolded out, or wept out.
>
> If a woman wants affectionate demonstrations, she must be willing to give them.
>
> —Ella Wheeler Wilcox in reply to the letter of "A Helpless Wife."

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

To understand a husband of the type this unfortunate woman possesses would necessitate knowing something about his mother; and the inherited and prenatal conditions which helped form his character. Our early Pilgrim Fathers and their cruel piety, which branded all expressions of affection and all demonstrations of love in the home circle as "improper" or "vulgar," were responsible for thousands of unhappy homes, and incomplete lives which mar our American society to-day. Repression of all natural emotions was the keynote in the melancholy song chanted in the typical New England home of last century.

New England brought into existence a race of sturdy men with strong characters, fine principles and good purposes, but with perverted ideas regarding human affectional and with mistaken opinions of what constituted good form.

Hundreds of such men exist who consider it an evidence of weakness or an exhibition of sentimentality to tell a woman she is dear, or to allow her any sign of affection after the days of courtship have passed.

When Women Dwarf Affections

Women themselves, reared in these homes by parents of this order, have helped to dwarf the natural affections of men brought up under different conditions. Southern men and men of Latin blood have been known to marry women brought up with the old-fashioned New England notion of the necessity to be "proper" and laugh at sentiment in the home, and they have gone through the starvation process until they became either emotional paupers or monuments of infidelity. Most men, wrongly reared in this manner, are simply congealed, and can be thawed out by a tactful and tasteful woman.

If a woman possesses a sense of humor, together with a fund of cheerfulness, and a warm, impulsive nature, she can change almost any man of austerity and seeming coldness into an affectionate, good comrade if she loves him enough.

A man can be laughed out of many moods when he can not be reasoned out or scolded out or wept out.

If a woman wants affectionate demonstrations she must be willing to give them. And she must choose the right time and place. To knock a man's cigar out of his lips in order to kiss him, or to push his paper away to sit on his knee, just when he is comfortably settled for an hour of reading and smoking, is not the way to win his affections. To be loved, one must be lovable.

This is a fact which is utterly ignored by hundreds of love-craving women the world over.

The wife who has appealed to the BOSTON AMERICAN to help her in her martial trouble has evidently failed to make herself lovable.

The wife who longs to be able to understand her husband wants first to understand herself.

She needs to give herself a careful analysis, and to try and put herself mentally in her husband's place, and to see why he does not care for her.

Then she should set about the work of making herself lovable; not only to her liege lord, but to everybody.

Let her cultivate all the possibilities within her nature and acquire accomplishments, and learn to be charming and delightful and able to entertain herself and others without appealing to the husband for assistance.

There is no surer way to win a man's attention than by showing your ability to be happy and popular and respected without it.

A Woman's Career

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

THREE women were lunching together. One was a successful writer, another a successful musician, and the third woman, the hostess, looked at the first two enviously.

"You two must feel so satisfied," she said. "You are really doing something, making a success of your lives. I envy you both."

Just at that moment the front door banged, there was a shout of "Mother!" and three children—two girls and a boy—burst into the room.

They paused on seeing that there were strangers in the room, then came shyly to their mother's side. They were lovely, healthy children with charming manners.

The successful musician smiled.

"And you," she said, "are the woman who envies other women, the woman who feels that she is not making a success of her life. Don't you think that the woman who has borne three children and is bringing them up well has done far more to be proud of than the woman who has written a book or composed a sonata?"

"I had not thought of it in that light," said the mother, thoughtfully. "Of course, I would not give up my babies for all the careers on earth, but sometimes I feel as though my existence was rather a humdrum, commonplace one. There are so many women doing the same things equally well."

Fortunately for the welfare of the human race, there are a great many women engaged in doing that most important work well. More women elect in that career than in any other.

It is more to a woman's honor and glory to be known as a splendid mother than as a splendid artist of any kind.

There are some rare women who are both, such as Shumann-Heink. But the woman who is proficient in the "mother" business need not envy any other woman, nor feel that she is not accomplishing much in life.

The women who are making a show in the world are not the ones who are doing the greatest work.

There are many saintly women who get little credit for all the good they do.

If you choose ten girls and ask them separately "What is the height of your ambition?" I venture to say that not one of them would answer "to be a good mother."

And yet that is the career that nine out of the ten would be best fitted for.

Every girl can fit herself to be a good wife and mother if she really cares to do so.

She can learn to be neat and economical and to be a good housekeeper. She can cultivate patience and kindness.

Just to be a good wife and mother may seem commonplace when you feel that your soul could rise to heights unknown, if it had had half a chance, but, believe me, my dears, it's better to flutter safely about the home nest than to fly too high and fall with a thump.

The Double Standard

By Dorothy Dix

"I HAVE been thinking," said the woman who likes to philosophize over her tea cup of an afternoon, "about a subject that interests me greatly, and that is the evolution of the new point of view on what we are pleased to call virtue, meaning thereby bodily chastity.

"Take, for instance, the double standard of morals for men and women. For ages we women have protested against that, and cried aloud at the injustice that damned a woman for making even one false step from the straight and narrow path, while a man was permitted to go horn-piping down the whole primrose path, and was, so far as society was concerned, not even glanced at sidewise.

The Old Way of Punishment.

"Why should the world turn its back on the woman who sinned, we asked, while it took the man who sinned with her to its bosom? Why was the fatted calf killed for the prodigal son and the prodigal daughter turned away without even a veal cutlet when she returned in repentance and rags?

"It was cruel, monstrous, unjust, and so we have kept on publicly demanding the same standard of morality for men and women—except in our own individual cases, you know, where we privately stuck to the time-honored plan of drawing our skirts away from Mary Magdalene and inviting Don Juan to dinner.

"Of course, it has always been woman's ideal that when the dual court of morals was done away with, and a single standard of virtue adopted, the reformation would be brought about by the angel sex, and that it would lift men up to its standard of purity. We women have had a vision of an earthly millennium when all men would be purged and pure, when there would be no more roaming husbands, when every young man would hail from Spotless Town, and have a past that his bride would be no more afraid to investigate than he was hers.

The Wrong Standard.

"I've always been deeply interested in this subject, but I confess that the more I looked into it, the farther off has seemed the glad, sweet day when every man would be a Sir Gallahad, and expect no cleaner slate from his wife than he offered her.

"Of late, however, it has been borne in on me that perhaps the day of the single standard of morals for men and women is not so far distant as I had supposed. More! that it was being brought about by men, instead of women, and that its result was not an uplift to humanity, but quite the contrary.

"Primarily, we may take it that men and women are made of the sam eclay, with the same passions, the same instincts, the same desires and weaknesses. Men have no temptation that women do not also have, but because for generations men have demanded a high order of virtues of women, women have fought with their devils, and conquered, and, as a sex, have remained chaste and sober.

"Men, however, didn't practice the high moralities they preached for women, and therefrom resulted the double standard, but it looks now as if they had relaxed the regidity of their views on the subject, and were inviting women to come down and make themselves at home on the lower platform on which they stand.

"Certainly if the books and plays tha men write reflect their sentiments the Scarlet Woman is no longer a figure at which to point the finger of scorn, but a creature of allure and romance who makes all the women without pasts as flat and tasteless as bread and butter.

Fiction Heroines with Pasts.

"Take the stories of Locke and Maurice Hewlett, certainly the foremost English writing novelists. All of their heroines without exception, of late, have been ladies who have thrown their caps over the windmill with never a regret. And they are not held up to scorn for having done so, nor made to wear the willow, or reap any terrible, but deserved, suffering as the Jeanie Deanses and Hester Prynnes were made to do. On the contrary, they marry the lovely and picturesque heroes, who pass by all the simple, virtuous girls for them, and they live happily ever after.

"It is your Sanchias who do not even flush over their adventures, your lady lion tamers with beetle careers behind them, your odalisques just escaped from the harem with a primitive sense of virtue and no excess baggage in the shape of conventions, that the pens of the men novelists exhaust themselves in exploiting nowadays, and whom they hold up as women who not only fascinate men, but are fitted to make unexceptionable wives and mothers. Indeed, in his last novel, Mr. Hewlett even goes so far as to make fun of a woman as being bourgeois because "she felt naked without a wedding ring."

The New Way of Mercy.

"As for plays, the same trend is observable. I could name you a dozen where the spotted heroine isn't even disinfected with rose water in the last act, but has eaten her cake and has it, too, in the shape of having had her fling and yet getting all the rewards that used to be reserved exclusively for impeccable virtue.

'Tis the Same is Real Life.

"In real life you may observe the same thing. In former days the chances of the woman with the past making a good marriage were absolutely nil. A lady's character had to be like the driven snow, or no wedding bells for her.

"Look at it now. When Mr. Chanler announced his engagement to Cavalieri he frankly announced that he and she had squared off their back records against each other, and called the matter even. Nor is Mr. Chanler the only millionaire that has taken this liberal view. In the last five years half a dozen other enormously rich and socially prominent men have married women whose name scandal has rolled over its tongue more than once. In addition the heretofore unique spectacle has recently been frequently presented of a forgiving husband taking an erring wife back and reinstating her in her former place.

"Doesn't all of this look as if men were really establishing the single standard of morality? And not a very exalted standard, either? Of course, it leans to mercy's side, but is it going to be for the public good, or the betterment of the race?

"The old way of crucifying the woman who sinned was as hard and cruel as death, but it kept women pure."

HE rose and began to pace the floor nervously. But Merkle seized him firmly by the shoulders and backed him to the wall.

"I've made up my mind to go, and you're going with me!" he said sternly. As Tom hung his head, he continued, kindly: "Just think how comfy we'll be in the old house, and how happy the mother will be to see her boy again! You don't think she'll consider you a failure, do you? Mothers aren't built that way.

"The Girl Is Waiting"

"And as for the girl, she's probably waiting and hoping that you will come back. What if you have made a fool of yourself? Don't you suppose that she'll understand that you're all the better for the experience? Come home, kid!" he pleaded, holding Tom at arm's length and looking at him pityingly. "Come home with me now."

Tom sank into the chair by the table and sobbed hysterically. "Why couldn't you have stayed out of here!" he cried. "I knew what I wanted to do before you came in! Why didn't you leave me to myself?"

He gave way completely to his feelings, sobbing like a child.

"I wanted to show you," said Merkle, very gently, "the folly of what you had in mind."

Tom lifted his head and stared at him stupidly.

"Then you knew all the time?"

"I couldn't help overhearing what passed between you and Le Roy and—" with a glance at the gas tube—"I guessed the rest."

"So," Tom broke out, "you've had an evening's fun at my expense!"

"That isn't fair, kid! I meant all that I said, and I'm in earnest now."

"Well," said Tom, "what was left me? I've disappointed the girl that loved me. I've disappointed my mother's faith in me, and worst of all, I've disappointed myself! I thought myself fit for the biggest things, and found that I couldn't rise above the smallest of them. I was told to go out into the world of real men and women and find out what I wanted and what I could do. And all I've succeeded in doing is to find out what I don't want, and what I can't do."

"The Crucible of Experience."

"Doesn't that prove that you're not a failure?" cried Merkle. "Success is a process of elimination and when a man has found out what he doesn't want, and what he can't do, he has found himself. And you have found yourself in the crucible of experience."

"That's what Jane said," said Tom. "The crucible of experience."

"That's why I want you to go back to Fairview," said Merkle. "Opportunity isn't geographical. It lies within one's self. It's waiting for you now if you will only seize it. Nothing but vanity or cowardice will keep you from it."

"I'm not a coward!" said Tom, indignantly.

"Will you go, then?"

"Sure!" Into Tom's face there came the old fire, the old determination. New York might go hang. He was going to succeed.

"Good boy!" shouted Merkle with the air of a conqueror. He ran quickly into his room, returning with a time table. "There's a pretty good train at 8. It'll get us there by night. What do you think?" He looked into Tom's face.

"I haven't any money," said Tom.

An expression of utter despair crossed Merkle's face. He remembered that he had given Weinstein his last cent. Slowly he rose, crossed the room to the calendar, and kissed the number thirteen, a fond farewell. Neither he nor Tom, in their excitement had heard the repeated ringing of the front door bell.

"Thunder!" he said. "Neither have I!"

"And even if we did have enough for our fare," said Tom, dejectedly, "we couldn't start a newspaper on nothing."

"Hell!" said Merkle looking at the calendar. "A bunch—thirteen, hell!"

"I thought it sounded too good!" sighed Tom.

"Wait a minute!" said Merkle. "Perhaps I can think of something."

Weinstein Returns

As he sat with his head in his hands there came from the hallway the sound of Mrs. Bannan's shrill voice engaged in contention. A dull rumble that accompanied it was now made out to be the voice of Weinstein, and a minute later that worthy burst into the room.

"What's the matter with you guys?" he demanded. "Didn't you hear me ring? I forgot my key and the old lady had to come down and let me in."

"You ought to thank your stars," said Merkle, menacingly.

"What's getting into you?" Weinstein blinked at him in astonishment.

"Where's my money?" Merkle glared at him vindictively.

"Give me a chance, can't you?"

"You don't mean to say that you hit it?" Merkle looked utterly incredulous.

"What does it look like?" asked Weinstein, triumphantly displaying a fat roll of bills.

"Great Lord! And half of it is mine!"

"Wait a minute—wait a minute; let me explain," said Wenstein, lifting Merkle out of the chair into which he had fallen.

The door swung open, and Mrs. Bannan, robed for the night and highly wrathful, strode into the room.

"Ain't you never going to bed? Do you think you can burn my gas all night?" she cried, going from burner to burner and turning all of them out. Only the light from the street lamp outside illuminated the room when she departed with a final slam of the door.

"It's all right, mother," pleaded Weinstein. "Be a good fellow for once."

"If you want to talk you'll have to do it in the dark." Her shrill voice came through the door. "Remember! All my other people are asleep. If I see those lights going again I'll put you all out!"

"How much did you get Joe?" said Merkle.

"Enough to buy a moving picture show, and I've got the thing all doped out."

Weinstein Invited In

"It's wrong dope," said Merkle. "We don't want a moving picture show. We've got a better proposition."

"What?" Weinstein looked dubious.

"A newspaper," continued Merkle. "We're going to start one in a town that looks like ready money."

"A newspaper? Where?" Weinstein was also pretending that he was from the grand old State of Missouri.

"Fairview, New York."

"Where I come from," added Tom.

"Not on your life!" said Weinstein, positively.

"Sh-h!" whispered Merkle. "Sit down and we'll tell you all about it."

He drew Weinstein into a chair, pulled another up beside it for Tom, and planted himself in a third.

"It's this way," he began.

The milkman was clattering in the area way and the boys were shouting the morning editions on the street. The gray of the dawn was in the room, and outside the city had begun to turn and stir. But they were still talking.

CHAPTER XX.

A Question of Policy

It took Merkle just half a day to discover that the possibilities in Fairview that Tom had pictured so glowingly were all there. He went to work with a light heart. A second-hand press was secured from a neighboring town. For the present the news from the nation at large was "borrowed" from the Buffalo morning papers.

Merkle attended to the local news. Weinstein busied himself with the office management, while Tom took charge of the advertising and soon was so busy that he almost forgot his troubles. He had secured lodgings for his two friends in his mother's cottage, and there, when the day's work was done, they gathered to talk it over and to plan fresh extensions. In four months the paper was on its feet, and there was a profit, undivided, of $200.

Weinstein Homesick

Weinstein, homesick for the white lights along Broadway, wanted to "take down" his share and go back to the old life. But Merkle and Tom were tremendously interested in the enterprise and thus far had been able to dissuade him.

A big "story" which deeply concerned Mr. Belknap was then in the making.

The lawyer had allowed his own interests to get the better of those of the public, which he was supposed to be serving on the town council. It looked like an innocent piece of "honest graft," but Merkle, whose purpose it was to make the paper a real benefit to the town, had planned to come out strongly against it.

Thus far he had not confided his plans to Tom. He feared that the boy's love for Jane, which was still deep, might influence him. It was reported that Jane was to be married to Hez Jenks, Mr. Belknap's secretary. Tom, in common with all the town, had heard the report and accepted it.

But the fact that the girl you happen to love happens to love another has never been a discourager of passion. Tom loved Jane more than ever, and was getting a melancholy pleasure out of his renunciation.

The evening of the proposed publication of the Belknap "exposure," Weinstein and Merkle sat at supper in the little living room of the Widow Wilson's cottage.

The widow had taken them both to her heart, although with a mother's suspicion she feared that they were loafing at the office and allowing her beloved boy to do all the work. Merkle had risen from the table, and was sitting in a corner by the old-fashioned fireplace, reading a Buffalo evening paper. Weinstein was still engaged in stoking in energy against the next day's toil.

The wife paused in her search, which she knew in advance would prove fruitless, and gazed with a dropped jaw at her caller. "You mean," she screamed, "that you are giving up a $100 job for a $75 man!" Then she threw the pants into the air, her eyes rolled, and she had a fit that shook her shoes off.

JOHN VANCE CHENEY, and ROSWELL FIELD ASSOCIATE EDITORS.

Mr. Hudson Maxim Attacks the Riddle of the Muses.

MR. HUDSON MAXIM has impressed himself upon the world as one of the distinguished inventors of the age. He has made signal discoveries in the realm of smokeless powder and high explosives. But in his intervals of leisure he has turned from his study of the action and reaction of chemicals to investigate the action and reaction of poeticals. And he exhibits in the field of linguistics the same qualities of daring that he displays in the realm of dynamics.

Mr. Maxim has a varied library of literary criticism, and in his studies he found that the many definitions of poetry were clouded with vagueness. His scientific mind was disturbed by this state of things: so he set to work to investigate the nature and elements of poetry and of language in general.

Herbert Spencer has a luminous essay on the "Philosophy of Style," announcing the doctrine that the best writing is that which economizes the energy of the reader's mind. Mr. Maxim, accepting this doctrine, carries the discussion forward into new fields. A unique and imposing volume called "The Science of Poetry and the Philosophy of Language" is the result of his studies and discoveries. After making merry with many of the old-time definitions of poetry, he offers us his own: "Poetry is the expression of insensuous thought in sensuous terms by artistic trope." This definition is worthy of careful considering by the thoughtful, for it states an impregnable principle of this sovereign art.

Mr. Maxim thus declares his main object:

"The main object of this book is to provide a practical method for literary criticism and analysis, and a standard of uniform judgment for determining the relative merits of literary productions, and further to supply a more practical and efficient means than we have had heretofore for the standardization of poetry, whereby any poem may be assayed, and the amount of its poetic gold determined and separated from the slag and dross. * * * The more I have studied, the stronger has grown my conviction that no other subject of equal interest and importance to mankind has been so neglected by science, so abandoned to the chaos of misunderstanding. There is, indeed, no general agreement as to what constitutes poetry. There are as many opinions as there are critics. Often the worst poetry is pronounced the best, and often the best the worst, by some who are considered leading authorities."

Mr. Maxim delves and dredges in this obscure realm of poetics, a realm that has been explored by Aristotle, Lessing, Coleridge and many another prospector in the mines of the Muses; and this bold new rhabdomancist claims to have made original discoveries in the field.

The scope of the work and its daring may be gathered from the eighteen questions, which Mr. Maxim claims are scientifically answered for the first time in his volume. I have space for only three:

> "Is Herbert Spencer's dictum true, that force of utterance is based mainly upon economy and the conservation of energy in expression on the part of the speaker and apprehension on the part of the hearer, or is there a broad exception to this rule, which renders its breach as frequent and of as much importance and use as its observance? If so, what is that exception What is the property that makes one piece of verse more potential and impressive than another, and that gives to oratory its chief impressiveness?
>
> "What is the philosophy of sublimity, and what are the true scientific factors of sublimity?
>
> "What are the true scientific definitions of wit and humor, and what is the scientific difference between them; and what relation does wit hold to poetry, and wit to slang, and what is the true relation of slang to poetry?"

Mr. Maxim has certainly done a notable piece of work. He has brought together a copious mass of interesting material. He has accounted for many things; he has given cunning formulae for testing and coining literary currency. But, notwithstanding his acute reasoning there will be those who will doubt that he has run down the ultimate secret of poesy—doubt that he has found a formula that will supersede the old time commission from the Muses, the commission that makes one man a poet and another man a "hoelt" (to use the expressive term of Mr. W. D. Howells). But no reader will fail to find in the volume a knight errantry of ideas that will help to rouse the mind to action. There is nothing soporific in this book.

The common man, with no college in him, much puzzled to distinguish between the poetry of the Bard of Avon and the rhymes of the lamented "sweet singer of Michigan," will find in this book certain criteria that he can understand; and the scholar will also find something to set him pondering if not expostulating.

Mr. Maxim appends to this treatise twenty pages of extracts which he offers as "great poetic lines." And among these (not excepting my own) the reader will find what constitutes a bigger sample case of pure poetry than is found in any other single volume. The student searching for touchstones of poetry may well examine this remarkable collection.

Mr. Maxim, tilting along the poetic highway, assails many long hallowed ideas, he shivers a lance on many a mailed and shielded tradition; he lunges at many a flagged and fortified convention. And I know from experience that he stands ready to defend with all the joy of battle every position taken in these breezy and unconventional pages. E. M.

The Mad Hamlet Tested by Modern Alienists

SHAKESPEARE'S Hamlet for three hundred years has been a live subject for both critic and reader. Its lines, often unknown to us, have been caught into the tissue of our thought. You recall the lady seeing "Hamlet" for the first time, who complained that though the action of the play was good, the dialogue was too full of hackneyed quotations.

One might think that with the immense bibliography of Shakespeare now in print there could scarcely be a new path for approaching the melancholy Dane. Yet Rev. Henry Frank, in "The Tragedy of Hamlet," seems to have found an unexplored opening. He studies Hamlet's manners and motives in the light of modern psychology. He finds, for instance, that, according to present-day theories, the ghost is explainable as a telepathic projection of Hamlet's own intense thought of his father—a projection dim and uncertain to the guards, but sharper and clearer to Horatio, and vividly apparent to Hamlet himself, and the author declares that Hamlet's "prophetic soul" instead of being visited by the King's phantom, itself conjured up the royal spectre.

Taking up the ancient controversy as to whether Hamlet was really mad or only feigning madness, Mr. Frank again applies his modern psychological theories, following lines akin to those in "The Philosophy of Suggestion," by Dr. Boris Sidis. He arrives at the conclusion that the play records a progressive development of monomania, that Hamlet becomes afflicted with that form of mental alienation we call impulsive automatism.

Besides flinging these very interesting scientific sidelights upon the Shakespearean screen, Mr. Frank draws from the play many brilliant observations on life, many profound teachings of ethics. His treatment is sincere and sympathetic, and will appeal to the lay reader as well as to the book-bent Shakespearean scholar. E. M.

Vivid Sketches of an Itinerant Preacher

A SOMBRE interest gathers around the series of sketches called "A Circuit Rider's Wife," by Mrs. Corra Harris, for the husband of the writer, the well-loved minister said to be the hero of the somewhat autobiographical story, has, since the publication of the book, committed suicide. But even had no purple of tragedy touched the book it would have been remarkable as a story of vivid human experience, a story not of crowding circumstance, but of restless feelings and sentiments, matters profoundly interesting to the discerning.

Mrs. Harris, writing as the wife of the Methodist preacher, gives teh record of the pastorate of the itinerant minister from the time of his marriage to her until his death as a superannuate. There are annals of hardships, privations, penuries; but there are also histories of great mystical, moving hours, hours of wrestling in prayer, of conquering sinners, of saving souls—hours of walking almost visibly with God; and again of dark and terrible hours when the minister loses the sight of God, loses hold of the leading hand. This is the husband's life of alternate exaltation and depression.

The story is told with a dispassionate intensity that leaves the feeling of deeps unuttered, of hopes long deferred. It is told with full measure of all of Mrs. Harris's virtues and faults of style; for no other woman of the South writes to-day with such color and force of phrase. Sometimes her paragraphs seem strained, sometimes they are flippant; but always they are flung out with a fine energy, with dramatic fervor.

Mrs. Harris's attitude toward life is often parochially wrong-headed, intemperate and intolerant. Her humor (never absent) has sometimes the shrewd, bitter nip of the north wind, and again is genial and all-embracing as the sweet South.

Unknown to herself, perhaps, Mrs. Harris has in the eager militant wife of the preacher sketched for us the new woman of the hour, the woman perturbed by the pull of some unseen planet beyond her ancient orbit.

With no epic story to tell, she has nevertheless struck out in the itinerant preacher a fine prophetic figure touched with power and pathos, a Puritan mould broken under the materialism of the age. She has given in her careless sketches of this obscure circuit outlines of comedy and tragedy that would have supplied a more frugal pen with material for several stories. E. M.

An Intimate and Pleasing Survey of Spain.

"QUIET Days in Spain," by Mr. C. Bogue Luffman, is the book of a born wanderer, equally at home under sky or tree or roof, a book to cheer the heart of those who are loth to wander from the comfortable chimney-chair and who yet would fain know the life and labor of foreign folk. Here, without the grime of travel, the clatter and clack of trains, the chaff and chatter of guides, we may go jaunting down the highways and byways of romantic Spain. Here, journeying from province to province, from city to city, we meet and greet a motley crowd—workers and idlers, high and low. We go to christenings and marryings and buryings, and even follow the author to jail, where, suspected as a spy, he goes as cheerfully as to a jaunt or a jollity outside.

"May we be led to understand, as far as possible, to enter the life of others!" This is the invocation of Mr. Luffman, and he certainly goes far on the way to realizing this ideal.

He has a genius for friendships along the way, and gets close to the heart of men and women and matters about him. He brings us new and vivid light on Spain, a light not caught into guide books, nor into the ordinary tourist notes. He gives us an intimate warm relationship with the very human land of Cervantes, the land of merriment and of dole.

The writer's observations upon social customs and tendencies have a practical as well as a romantic value. The following paragraph upon conditions in modern Spain is somewhat of a revelation of the medievalism that still holds sway in that country, and it suggests an explanation of Spain's place at the foot of the European class:

"The blight of Spain is in her system of government. Her public men aspire to be dictators and negative every wholesome desire when it leaves no room for their personal advancement. All decrees are of a suppressive character: Press censorship; no public meetings; no free education; no unions or alliances; no emigration without permit; no petitions for work or demonstrations against rapacious authority. With the placing of Government supporters in every position of profit, with the taxation of every form of labor, product and enterprise, no more is done than will raise revenue, fill the pockets and increase the hoards of those in office, and add to the mountain of make-believe composing the political and social system of Spain." Attuning the Jangled Bells of Matrimony

WHEN an invalid finds that his disease and all its symptoms and crises have long ago been tabulated and provided with palliative and panacea, he feels comforted in his misery. He realizes that his malady is not peculiar to himself, but is a [illegible] of woes suffered by many, endured and often cured.

So a dissatisfied husband or wife, thinking his case or hers the first and hardest trial of the mortal lot, will be reassured by reading "Little Problems of Married Life" by William George Jordan, and finding all his or her sorrows listed and prescribed for. The writer, with a quiet wisdom, tinged by remedial tincture of humor, has marshaled all the sins of omission and commission that make for marital unhappiness, and like a sympathetic father confessor he counsels each sorrowing one and shows him how to sin no more and to go in peace. An Entertaining Football Story for Juveniles

"WHAT do you do when you go to school?" I once asked a curly little boy. "Just wait for it to let out," was the laconic answer.

I should think that a similar waiting might well be the occupation of the boys in the military academy which is the scene of Arthur Knipe's new juvenile story, "Captain of the Eleven," for certainly that campus, in the football season, is a field of toil and glory that dims the lustre of the lexicon and the atlas.

The hero wins his difficult way to leadership on the football team. Incidentally he learns a good deal about bridge building, and he finds that a boy, working out his living on one of those massive steel structures, has a kind of "nerve" which is superior to that of the panting athletes exerting themselves for pleasure on the football field or the cinder path. Literature upon the proper training of sons and daughters is becoming more and more plentiful. Perhaps we need it all, for authors of books on this subject make it quite plain that parents as a rule have very poor ideas of the rights of a child and the duties of a parent to a child. "The Care and Training of Children," by Le Grand Kerr, M. D., just published by Funk & Wagnalls Company, deals with child training in practically every feature, hygienic, physical, mental and moral. The same company has issued a short treatise on the moral and religious education of children by Sir Oliver Lodge under the title of "Parent and Child."

Paul Dubois, M. D., in "Nervous States, Their Nature and Causes," points out that neurasthenia, contrary to general impressions, is not a new disease created entirely by the conditions of modern life. Most men and women are subject to various degrees of debilities, so that nature reacts and they become irritable or sad. The most healthy of men may become temporarily neurasthenic. New books for young people are being issued by Little, Brown & Company. One of these is "Jack Collerton's Engine," by Hollis Godfrey. Jack Collerton, an alert, energetic American youth, goes abroad to enter his father's airship engine in an English contest. A rival company, with unscrupulous methods, is a competitor in the same contest. Jack's engine is stolen and he has an exciting time in England and on the Continent in his attempts to recover it. An adventure on a rapid express, an unpleasant experience with the Swiss police, and a wild dash across France in an airship are only a few of the many incidents that crowd the book with action that will appeal to all up-to-date boys.

"Frolics at Fairmount," by Etta Anthony Baker, is a sequel to "The Girls of Fairmount." The "Girls of Fairmount" proved an enjoyable group of acquaintances to girl readers last year, and Mrs. Baker has written another book about them and their delightful boarding school. There is plenty of variety in this further account of their school life, which deals principally with the hours spent outside the class-room. A mystery which affects their relations with a neighboring school, a unique golf match, a burglar, a Winter vacation in New York, a candy pull, and the military wedding of a favorite teacher, indicate that the girls are well occupied in the leisure hours of the school term which this volume describes. College boys figure more largely than in the first volume, but the girls are still schoolgirls, intent only on wholesome fun. Clever and lively characters, plenty of varied incident, and a steadily interesting theme are the features of this high-grade book for girls.

THE LAUGHING SATYR

The Story of a Studio Murder Mystery, from "The Veil of Clay," by Meta Simmins

(Copyright in America by London Daily Mail, 1910)

SYNOPSIS

RICHARD JARDINE, a sculptor, has his studio in Watergate street, London. On his way to it late one night he prevents Beatrice Charters from throwing herself into the Thames. She tells him that she was driven from a good position in a private family by the son of the house, who paid unwelcome attention to her. Jardine takes her to his studio to put her in the care of his housekeeper.

When they reach the studio Jardine finds he has a visitor and leaves Beatrice for a few minutes. When he returns he finds her over the body of a distant cousin of his, Lewis Stuvessant, who turns out to be the man Beatrice fled from. The girl has a bloody scalpel in her hand and Stuvessant has been stabbed to the heart.

To save Beatrice, whom he thinks has killed Stuvessant, Jardine puts the body in the hollow of his clay statue, "The Laughing Satyr," on which he is working. An artist friend, Dominic Fleury, Stuvessant's mother and Mrs. Constance Knowles, Jardine's sister, who was engaged to marry the dead man, all call at the studio asking news of Stuvessant. Jardine tells them all that Stuvessant had left after a short visit with him.

"The Laughing Satyr" grins down on the sculptor until Jardine resolves to move the body. When he breaks the clay coating the body has disappeared. He reads in an afternoon paper that a body answering the description of the dead man had been found in the Thames. He goes to the morgue and identifies it.

At the funeral of the murdered man a beautiful red-haired girl makes a scene, saying that the body was that of "her Jim," who had promised to marry her. After the funeral Jardine returns to his studio. His attention has been attracted by a dumbbell used to weigh down the body in the river. He discovers the mate to it among his dumbbells and while he is holding it in his hand his sister enters the studio. Her suspicions have been aroused and when she sees the dumbbell she thinks her brother has killed the man she was to marry.

Constance returns to her apartments and decides the law must take its course. Just after she has written a letter to the police, accusing her own brother, Mrs. Stuvessant enters. Lewis's mother gives Constance the dead man's cigarette case. On opening it the picture of the red-haired girl, who called the dead man "her Jim," is disclosed. Constance sees the malice that prompted the gift.

AND not the least drop in Constance's cup of humiliation was the thought that it was for this man without honor—without faith toward man or woman, for his sake that not ten minutes since, without regret, she had slammed the door on her past, been ready to sever all ties of blood, silence all promptings of sisterly love, been ready to betray her brother. The thought of the letter she had written was like a knife in her heart.

She laid the case down carefully on the table by which she stood and without a word took up the letter she had written to the Commissioner of Police and tore it into fragments with steady, deliberate fingers.

Still in silence, moving with that graceful deliberation that characterized her, she crossed the room and cast the fragments into the open grate. Not she herself, nor the discomfited watching woman, dreamed for a moment of all that simple action symbolized.

Then, without a look, without the smallest indication of her knowledge of Mrs. Stuvessant's continued presence, she passed out of the room.

SEVENTH INSTALMENT

MRS. STUVESSANT stared at the door which had closed noiselessly behind Constance Knowles.

Her malicious impulse had failed signally despite its moment of white triumph, and the honors of war were all with the woman whom she had intended to crush and wound. No doubt she had planted her sting, but the thought was singularly lacking in satisfaction.

She drew up her cloak about her shoulders with a slow look round the room, a look of farewell. She realized that. For the future Mrs. Knowles' house must necessarily be forbidden ground, and though she had hated the woman with the unreasonable jealous hatred of a mother toward a rival in her son's affections, she had, nevertheless, enjoyed the eclat which her distant relationship with a woman as popular as Mrs. Knowles had conferred.

Her face on a sudden toook on a look, gray and aged. She felt intolerably lonely as she stood there; gradually her world was crumbling about her. Suspicion, the awful, unformulated suspicion that was in her heart, colored her outlook on everything.

Until she knew—until she had seen justice done on the hand that had struck down her son—whom dare she trust? She was beginning to realize that vengeance is a companion whose fierce demands on heart and brain are unceasing and consuming.

She was turning to leave the room when her eyes fell on that little shower of paper, the fragments of that letter which Constance had destroyed and cast upon the open hearth.

The sight of them riveted Mrs. Stuvessant's attention; to her morbid mood they seemed fraught with an odd significance. For why had Constance in that moment of her pain and humiliation paused to perform an action which, as the woman remembered it now, had nothing of haste or nervous unconsciousness about it, but had seemed rather to have been deliberate, systematic—almost symbolic?

Just for a moment Mrs. (Stuvessant hesitated. Then from those white scraps that littered the tiled hearth she looked toward the closed door, and there was something curiously stealthy and feline in the movement of her slender neck, the backward glance of her head as she did so.

Then slowly, still with that subtle suggestion of stealth, but with no indication of haste or excitement, she bent down over the hearth and retrieved the torn pieces of the letter Constane had thrown there.

The Fragments Pieced

tain that she had recovered every fragment, Mrs. Stuvessant gathered the pieces of paper together and dropped them carefully into the bag which hung at her wrist. Then composedly and without haste she left the softly lighted drawing-room of the flat that seemed strangely deserted and silent, as she went out through the gay, printhung little hall.

It was not until the clock in the tower by the river struck one with that sonorous booming note that hung vibratingly in the still night air that Mrs. Stuvessant found time for the task on which her mind had dwelt absorbingly all the evening. Then, alone in her sitting-room in the great hotel whose windows looked out over the Thames, with infinite trouble and wonderfully deft fingers she peiced together that letter which Constance Knowles had written concerning Richard Jardine to the Commissioner of Police.

Not quite complete, that letter, yet containing no gaps that a woman's intelligence could not only too surely bridge. Magda Stuvessant sat brooding over it, sentence by sentence; sat on in the silence that was punctuated only by the ever-recurring chimes of the great clock at Westminster.

Fleury Appears

Richarda Jardine came into the sitting-room of the lower flat at Watergate street with his hands full of flowers.

He laid the flowers down on the table and moved to the window, racked by a sudden remembrance of that scene which had taken place when last he stood in this rooom; a remembrance that left him white, with quivering nerves.

Constance had thought him guilty * * his own sister, without hearing his explanation, without giving him a chance—not that he would have stooped to refute her hysterical accusation—of explaining. Constance had believed him guilty of murder. And worse than murder in his own eyes, lying deceit—unspeakable deceit. That Mrs. Stuvessant—Fleury even—should suspect him—that was bad enough. But Constance—his own sister!

Now it was Fleury who was uppermost in those thoughts.

It was impossible to deceive himself—Fleury was changed. The old familiar intercourse that had been so integral a part of his life ever since those old days when Fleury for a time had shared his rooms with him had ceased. Fleury had hardly been in Watergate street since that Sunday morning of the tragedy; he had not seen him at all since the day of Stuvessant's funeral.

Somehow it only seemed fitting that at that moment of his thoughts he should hear Fleury's familiar rattle of the letter box, which as a rule preluded his attack on the knocker. He dropped the flowers he held and, opening the sitting room door, undid the latch of the outer door of the flat.

A Shouder Shrug

"Hello, Fleury—that you? Come in," he said over his shoulder, and went back into the room.

"You look very festive!" Fleury said, examining the flowers with which Jardine had spread the table. "What's on? I hope I am not in the way."

"D'you mean the flowers?" It seemed to Jardine that in spite of himself there was an almost hostile note in his voice. "Miss Charters is leaving her room for the first time today. I had to do something to lighten up this dreary hole."

"It's the! sort of hole that suits me down to the ground," Fleury remarked, looking around. "There's no room in London I like better than this of yours, Dick."

It was early afternoon, and the sky above the river was exceptionally clear and blue after yesterday's rain, but the wind was high and chill, and the river, flowing at half-tide, was choppy and sullen looking, with here and there the white curl of a wave upon it. Dominic Fleury's face darkened as he looked out of a window at the river; it reminded him so forcibly of the gruesome events of the last three weeks. He cast a glance over his shoulder at Jardine humming industriously and arranging flowers with less than his usual skill in such matters, and wished that he could speak.

Jardine looked up, conscious of the strange magnetism of watching eyes. He started, and the vase he held shook and the water spilled slightly.

"Pooor old Stuvessant!" Fleury broke out suddenly. "How this place brings up the thought of him. What a rum affair it is, Dick—that this should be the last place he was seen alive——"

Jardine looked up sharply.

"Why?" he demanded. "Whby should it be more strange that he should last be seen here than at Simpson's, for instance, or at Calabash Club in Leicester square?"

'How Did He Get Into the River?'

"Why? 'Pon my soul, I hardly know," he said, with a touch of irritation in his voice; "except that it seems to give the whole hideous thing a more personal note. Somehow one thought precious little of Stuvessant when he was alive, but dead ——. How the deuce did he get into the river? That is what I keep wondering. Could he have fallen in—I suppose he had been drinking?"

Jardine's nerves quivered.

"You seem to forget that he had been stabbed," he said, in a harsh voice.

"Good heavens! No, I don't forget that," Fleury cried. "What a horrible, sinister business it is; there's no getting away from it! There was always something secret and sinister about Stuvessant in life; he was a man who lived behind a mask, and now—well, I suppose he's carried his secret with him. I only wish we had buried it, good for all, with him in his grave."

He spoke with a sudden sombre passion and paused, staring out over the gray river and the sky above it, over which an answering grayness was creeping with April abruptness. "But the police are not likely to let sleeping dogs lie; it's not their way, despite all the cheap satire which is levelled at them; and they're jolly reticent, too; one never can be sure how much they know or suspect."

He spoke slowly, and to Jardine it seemed every word ewre weigated by some weighted by some sinister double meaning. He felt the muscles of his face twitch when Fleury turned to him with a sudden question:

"I suppose you've formed no theory, Dick?"

"I?" To Jardine it seemed that into those gray eyes, meeting his so straightly, had sprung a repetition of that look which had flashed startlingly at him across the body of the fainting girl. His voice was hardly under control as he continued: "Not a suspicion of a theory—and you?"

Fleury looked away abruptly.

What About Mary and the Children?

¶ Let's have a plain talk, Mr. Family-man! You love them dearly and they're all the world to you.

¶ But you're all the world to them, too. It is you who support them. What if you are taken away from them? Must your wife shift for herself and your children be dependent on the bounty of others?

¶ The John Hancock provides a sure nest-egg available in time of need. You set a little aside which we will regularly collect and thus establish a fund which "Mary" can secure at once if you should be taken away.

¶ We will also insure all members of the family. Drop us a postal and we will have a courteous representative tell you all about our many ways of establishing a "protection" fund.

STATE ST. NEWS FOR INVESTORS

The market persists in displaying an ostentatious [illegible] to the stealthy and unending liquidation of which the Street hears so much every day. Obviously there is free, if not stealthy, selling, but it is equally as obvious that the buying forces are able to absorb all that the other has to sell.

$ $ $

Aside from the [illegible] over the cotton bills and from the unfavorable [illegible] of trade, the money situation is good. New York bankers [illegible] by Chicago bankers that [illegible] will have to be [illegible] before the end of the year. Almost [illegible] that there will be no [illegible] to the stock market active enough to consume the available supply of call money.

$ $ $

Contrariwise, a cheerful view is not taken of the statement that is to be submitted by the Steel Corporation next Monday. Gloomy prophecies are plentiful. A heavy shrinkage in unfilled orders is predicted. The falling off is attributed to the reduced buying of the railroad companies, which are said to have cut down their rail orders by 75 per cent. below actual capacity. Moreover, there can be no improvement until the railways hear from Washington in regard to freight rates, which will not be for a couple of months.

$ $ $

Following the example of the railroad employes in supporting the railroad demand for an increase of freight rates, the savings banks of New York will ask the Interstate Commerce Commission to permit the advance. They will do this on the [illegible] that if the roads are not permitted to advance their rates, dividends will have to be cut, and this under the laws of several Eastern States will reduce the number of available securities in which savings banks can invest. Savings banks as a rule buy only bonds of railroads that are paying dividends regularly. Bonds of the Missouri Pacific Railroad Company were dropped out of this class when its dividend was cut about three years ago.

$ $ $

It might be urged that some of the conspicuous advances are not a credit to the [illegible], for rises in the Gould properties are notorious for their lack of permanency. It would require a very stimulated imagination indeed to conceive of investors rushing into the Missouri Pacific or Wabash or [illegible] Southern Railway. It is altogether likely that overwrought nerves on the part of [illegible] are responsible for these [illegible]. Even so, there is enough buying to [illegible] offset the liquidation of [illegible] holders and the palpable operations of the bear clique.

$ $ $

Action of steel stock in the market in the last few days has been such as to attract the attention of persons who believe the tape always tells every important piece of news in advance. Trading has been [illegible] heavy around 70 and, making allowances for manipulation, there has been accumulation by the important interests. It is evident that some news of [illegible] importance is about to become public in connection with the Trust. Every figure on the ticker tape says so. Action of the steel Trust directors seems to bear out the theory that they know something they are concealing. Action of the [illegible] suggest that this mysterious news is favorable to the trust. There is nothing in the line of big orders expected just now, for the railroads are in no humor to buy heavily. The news that is crowding to the surface is evidently something of a diplomatic or political nature.

$ $ $

United Railways Investment Company preferred stock is expected to earn about [illegible] per cent. this year because of the large gains being made in earnings of companies controlled by it. Talk is being renewed of the resumption of dividends which were suspended in January, 1907, when 2½ per cent. was paid in scrip. Payments to preferred stockholders were stopped partly because of the damage done to the company's properties in San Francisco by the earthquake.

$ $ $

Some weakness is observed among the [illegible] which have been so strong of late. Stock of the Texas Company, which [illegible] by John W. Gates, declined [illegible] between the Standard Oil is making a fight for business. It has been [illegible] for several months that the Standard Oil people are paying less attention to railroads and more attention to the oil business. There is an overproduction of oil [illegible]

$ $ $

Reports from the floor of the [illegible] exchange [illegible] that the pool in Tennessee Copper [illegible] very conservative bank backing [illegible] the objective is still higher than the prices yet attained. A favorable [illegible] may be made soon. [illegible] a very good one in view of the [illegible] copper situation. [illegible] and there is no short interest in the security worth talking about.

BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN.

HARVARD NIGHT DRAWS CROWD

Last night was "Harvard night" at the [illegible] Mechanics' Exposition, now running so successfully at Mechanics Building and a vast audience listened fascinated by the music of the United States Marine Band. The program contained about all of the popular Harvard airs and the voices of many hundreds joined in the inspiring tunes. Like on every other night, at the close of the concert, when the sailors from the naval recruiting station salute the colors, at the first strains of "The Star Spangled Banner" the great crowd stood with bared heads in a thrilling scene. Next week will be the last of the engagement of the United States Marine Band. Monday, October 17, will come the band of the Seventy-fifth Regiment of Canada from Lunenburg, Nova Scotia. The management has invited the children of all charitable institutions in the city and vicinity to visit the fair. Next Tuesday has been set apart for "Society night," when in addition to a special concert by the United States Marine Band and special attractions in the Edison exhibit, there will be a special vocal concert by the Meister singers composed of the Harvard, Schubert and the Weber quartets and Miss Gertrude Holt, soprano soloist.

$200,000 SALE OF FREIGHTERS

The J. S. Winslow Company of Portland, coastwise shippers, has bought the twelve vessels composing the White-Palmer fleet of Boston, commonly known as the Palmer fleet.

The Winslow company is engaged in the coal carrying trade between Norfolk, Philadelphia and New England ports. The vessels taken over from the Palmer fleet will probably be used for the same purpose. The deal gives the Winslow company a total of thirty-four vessels, as it has been running twenty-two already. It now becomes the largest coastwise fleet in American waters, if not in the world.

The twelve vessels of the Palmer fleet are all practically new. None is over ten years old. They are all over 2,000 tons, with one exception. Their value is estimated at [illegible], which would make the deal total nearly a quarter of a million dollars.

This deal was consummated at a meeting in Boston, at which a new company was formed. Eleazer W. Clark of Portland, manager of the Winslow company, was elected president, and [illegible] Spaulding of Portland treasurer.

PLAY IS ESSENTIAL PART OF EDUCATION SAYS JOSEPH LEE

Normal education for the normal child does not exist in America. The sick body or mind or the criminal alone are trained. Medical inspection is to prevent the schools from becoming a clearing house for disease. Do not regard physical education as education. There is no other kind of education but mental education. Gymnastics are well enough, but human beings were not meant to wiggle their arms. They had better throw a punch at something. It is not motion but emotion and passion that is desired in play. Play is the most essential part of education.—School Committeeman Joseph Lee at "Health Day" exercises.

LAW POSTPONES ELOPERS' PLANS

Their runaway marriage plans having gone amiss, Miss Ethel Gladys Day and John Wilbur Nason, a young Dorchester couple, have got to wait until Wednesday before the marital knot can be tied, and all just because the city clerk at Providence refused to grant them a license under any other condition.

Miss Day is the daughter of Alexander Day, an expressman, who lives at No. 7[illegible] [illegible] street, Dorchester. The groom-to-be is the son of Frank Nason, an electrician, who lives at No. 27 Thornley street, Dorchester. The young couple eloped to Providence and sought to be married right away. They were told, however, they would have to wait five days.

"We explained to the clerk that we had rather not wait," said Miss Day, "but he said the law was plain and suggested that we return next week. Jack and I will probably go back to Providence Wednesday and get married."

ENDS LIFE IN A TEMPLE.

NEW YORK, Oct. 8.—Going to the Temple Emmanu-El on Fifth avenue Benjamin J. Bachman committed suicide in the trustee's room by shooting. Mr. Bachman [illegible] been an usher in the church.

Special Notice.

ASTHMA

HAVE YOU HEARD about the new treatment, which not only relieves at once, but actually cures to STAY cured? It is creating a wonderful amount of interest among all classes who suffer, and anybody can use it at home and get entirely well. Seventy-five thousand cases have been treated, and the results are marvellous.

The Hayes Bulletin H-1032 tells all about it, and is sent free to any one writing P. HAROLD HAYES, Buffalo, N. Y.

AMERICAN WANT "ADS" BRING QUICK RESULTS

BIG LOSS IN GIVING UP PRIZE AUTO RACE

By J. C. KERRIGON.

The abandonment of the Grand Prize race, so far as the Long Island Motor Parkway is concerned, is to be regretted. The men interested in this contest had gone to considerable expense and trouble in perfecting machines that were in every way capable of going the distance with safety to themselves and the public. They had invested money to secure the services of the best possible drivers and had not hesitated to spend money, in order that during the contest their representatives should be equipped with the best at their command. To call the race off at the eleventh hour, as it were, was to entail upon the entrants a considerable expense for which they have no return whatsoever, but aside from that the abandonment of the contest means disappointment to hundreds of thousands of people who had figured that the Grand Prize race would be really worth witnessing and had made arrangements accordingly.

The loss to the residents of Long Island, as a result of this, is inestimable.

Still, in view of the fact that the criticism of the Vanderbilt Cup race was of such an unjust and unwarranted nature, the Motor Cups Holding Company felt that it was inadvisable on its part to attempt the holding of a second big race this year, especially since it was impossible to secure militia to patrol the course and consequently it requested the Automobile Club of America that it be relieved from holding it.

Indianapolis would like to hold the Grand Prize race, and so would Savannah, and if the race is not to be held in New York, then it rightly belongs to the Southern city.

The first Grand Prize race was held in Savannah, on Thanksgiving Day, 1908, and that contest proved one of the best in the history of the sport in America. The course was properly patrolled by militia.

"It seems as though all the world was interested in any mechanical invention which proves to be capable of demonstrating a meritorious feat," said a bystander, who was among those who stopped to gaze at the Thomas "high gear" car, which ended its three day test among the congested traffic on Boston business streets last night. During that period nearly two hundred miles were covered on the high gear, the other speeds being eliminated and the transmission officially sealed by L. W. Snow, secretary of the Bay State Automobile Club, and about one-half the distance at a speed not exceeding two miles per hour. Whenever a stop was made a crowd always collected, and there was an endless amount of questioning as regards the car and its construction.

The test was highly successful from every point of view, but particularly to the motorist who rode in the car, the general opinion seeming to be that a tremendous advance has been made toward the ideal motor car construction in the long-stroke, large-valve six-cylinder motor, which is bound to be universally adopted in 1913, if not before, by manufacturers of high grade automobiles. Altogether this test was a wonderful achievement, and it does not seem so far distant when they will have gearless transmissions.

The E. M. F. Company of Detroit has announced a reduction of the price of its E. M. F. and Flanders cars. The former has been reduced in cost from $1,250 to $1,000, and the latter from $750 to $700. This price is to take effect immediately, and will be continued on all the 1911 models. Rumor has it that the E. M. F. Company is about to construct a seven-passenger car to sell for less than $2,000.

FREE TALKS ON COOKING

Mrs. Alice Gitchell Kirk, for twenty years a leading lecturer, instructor and authority on domestic science, will deliver twelve talks to women at Henry Siegel Co.'s store next week. Her interesting talks there in the Spring will be remembered. She delighted and instructed throngs of Boston women on household subjects. She will lecture every day during the week except on Columbus Day, which is Wednesday, when the great emporium will be closed. Her topics and the time for her lectures are as follows: Monday, 10 a. m., "Use of Eggs in All Cooking"; Monday, 3 p. m., "Dinner Salads and French Cooking"; Tuesday, 10 a. m., "Supper and Luncheon Salads, Mayonnaise"; Tuesday, 3 p. m., "Casserole Cooking"; Thursday, 10 a. m., "Preparation and Cooking of Vegetables"; Thursday, 3 p. m., "Bread"; Friday, 10 a. m., "Sandwiches for Lunches and Entertaining"; Friday, 3 p. m., "Cake Making and Baking with Butter."

The lectures are free to all who care to attend and will be found to be worth listening to by every housekeeper.

Those thus rewarded were Henry L. Abbott, Charles L. Clifford, Reuben L. Kelly, Ernest L. Parch, George D. Murray, Eugene P. A. Simpson, Ernest D. Small and Frederick Baitzley.

The executive committee of the Vermont association has begun work on the plans for the annual husking party, which will be given in the Mechanics' building Nov. 4. $200,000 FOR U. OF M.

WHY WE MUST GET BACK OUR LOST MERCHANT MARINE.

"In the cruise of the American fleet around the world I did not see a merchant ship flying our country's flag," says Admiral Sperry. See

TO-MORROW'S BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN.

GOOD THINGS TO EAT

Grapes are very plentiful this season and moderately cheap. There are at least a dozen varieties offered for sale by fruit dealers, coming from all parts of the United States and from Europe. The ordinary varieties are selling for about the same prices as a year ago, Niagaras and Delawares for 20 cents a basket and Concords for 15 cents. California tokays and muscats sell for 6 to 10 cents a pound, according to quality.

Eggs are growing scarcer and dearer, notwithstanding the fact that Spring pullets have begun to lay. Strictly fresh eggs are selling at 47 to 50 cents a dozen.

Strange as it may seem butter is becoming cheaper day by day. That is in the wholesale market. The price is dropping in fractions of a cent, but the tendency is decidedly downward. The refrigerator warehouses reported approximately 62,000,000 pounds of butter in storage October 1, about 12,000,000 more than was stored a year ago. Fancy northern creamery butter sells at wholesale for 31 and 32 cents a pound and records of sales between dealers as low as 30 cents a pound.

Potatoes are very cheap. The best State of Maine potatoes sell for 50 cents a bushel. Good potatoes are offered at retail for 60 and 65 cents a bushel.

A FEW PEOPLE DON'T USE AMERICAN WANT ADS

For the same reason that modern methods were once scoffed at by our forefathers, yet, in spite of prejudice, progress has its way. The successful majority employ the "WANT AD WAY" to secure tenants, or buyers, or help, or employment. They employ the AMERICAN, realizing that it is the only paper which will carry their message to nearly all of the people.

If Pig Dolgorouki Could Write—

All the Newspapers Might Get from Him a Letter Reading Like This:

Copyright, 1910, by American-Journal-Examiner

In Paris, where a famous singer lives, there is a prince named Dolgorouki.

In Virginia, where Mr. John Armstrong Chaloner lives, there is a pig named Dolgorouki.

Mr. Chaloner entered his pig in the local fair and named the pig Dolgorouki.

With the sending of the pig he issued an interview giving his reasons for calling the pig Dolgorouki.

First of all, Mr. Chaloner tells us that he named the pig Dolgorouki because he wanted to insult the Prince Dolgorouki.

It seems to the Boston American that an honest American Virginia pig, which cannot read, write or speak, is entitled to fair treatment—and so we print here the letter which we think would be sent to the Boston American and to other newspapers by Pig Dolgorouki, if that pig could write.

To the Press of America:—

I, Pig Dolgorouki, write to repudiate the name that has been fastened upon me unjustly.

I am a pig, but, thank Heaven, I am no prince.

To name me Dolgorouki was an insult to ME, not an insult to the prince.

To give an honest pig the name of a worthless prince is an insult to the honest pig. I am an honest pig, and I refuse to be known as Dolgorouki for these reasons and many others:

A Russian prince or any other kind of a prince is ridiculous, out of date and useless in the world.

An American pig is a useful, sensible creature, doing its duty, filling a useful place in civilization.

A Russian prince is a parasite, living on others, giving nothing in return for what he gets from the world.

An American pig is a producer, a valuable asset; he gives his entire carcass, hams, bacons, shoulders and head, in return for a living.

I object to being compared to a Russian prince or named for a Russian prince.

An American pig is a self-respecting animal. He sticks in his own pig pen and doesn't wander into the pens of others. He respects the rights of others, and in that he is different from the average prince, Russian, French, English or German.

True, while I live, and while that Russian prince lives, we are apparently equally worthless. We don't work, we don't earn a cent, we don't do much of anything for anybody else.

But you must not judge princes or pigs while living, for, living, a prince or a pig arouses little admiration.

I ask that you compare me, the Virginia pig, to Dolgorouki, the Russian prince, after we are dead.

When we both lie dead, I, the American pig, will represent four hundred pounds of good pork—valuable pork, which will stimulate useful thought and activity in others.

And the Russian Prince Dolgorouki will represent two hundred pounds of worthless carrion.

Hence I object to being compared to or named for a Russian prince, either in life or in death, and I am

Yours respectfully,
AN AMERICAN PIG—NOT Dolgorouki.

A Margin of 15 Minutes

By THOMAS TAPPER

"Bind together your spare hours by the cord of some definite purpose and you know not how much you may accomplish. A man is commonly either made or marred for life by the use he makes of his leisure time."—JEREMY TAYLOR.

I.

THE secret of Culture lies in Cultivation.

The secret of Cultivation lies in Labor.

The secret of Labor lies in the desire for self-expression.

Self-expression is pressing out the latent force of one's self, just as education is leading out the latent power in one's self.

Hence education is not pounding facts into the mind. It is getting the storage battery replete with power, and then learning how best to use and direct it.

UP to the very moment when the silver cord is loosened and the golden bowl is broken, and the spirit returns whence it came, a man's neverceasing duty is to let himself out. Whatever the main stream of his labor is, he should so master his environment that the great water-sheds of life about him (the Present) and behind him (the Past) will send into the main stream as many contributory rivulets as possible.

We will call the stream his business; the contributory rivulets his culture. Gradually their waters will mingle so perfectly that they are indistinguishable. Then the man of business is cultured, and he can talk to you to any length and not reveal the nature of his calling.

"You are right," says the business man. "It is all reasonable, and sounds fine, but when is a man to get time for this desirable state of affairs?"

The answer to this is, get it out of the waste basket; out of the odds and ends of time that are thrown away every day. There is no man living who cannot devote to cultural ends one ninety-sixth of his time in twenty-four hours. Just a shade more than 1 per cent.

One ninety-sixth of twenty-four hours is fifteen minutes, or in three sections of five minutes each.

But what can a man do in so little time?

Few men realize that when they deposit money for interest-earning, they must also deposit time. What time can do to a five-cent piece deposited daily for fifty years is amazing. It gives a new point of view to a five-cent smoke, a five-cent glass of beer, or a five-cent piece spent for any of the merry life temptations. What makes the result incredible is the time plus the regularity of deposit.

Now, fifteen minutes a day amounts approximately to ninety-two hours in one year. If you will pick up any volume of good literature and read its pages deliberately, pronouncing every word, and giving thought to the author's meaning, you will find that you can read in fifteen minutes about three thousand words.

This amount of reading performed daily for one year gives an aggregate of over one million words, or five thousand pages averaging two hundred words per page, or twenty-five volumes of two hundred pages each. In ten years this amounts to two hundred and fifty volumes.

Now, this use of fifteen minutes per day as applied to books will work with the same accumulative interest when applied to anything else.

But let us, for the sake of true culture, the deep and lasting kind, assume that one-third of our fifteen minutes must be devoted, by and large, to reading the hard places a second and a third time, to looking up words we do not fully understand. Even then, in a twelvemonth a man can read intensively seventeen volumes of two hundred pages each, or more than one hundred and seventy volumes in ten years.

The secret lies, however, not in the general desire to do this, but in doing it, and in doing it with regularity. In time, interest begins to accumulate in the form of scholarship, this swells the principal, and you move on more rapidly. The very culture that comes from your effort to liberate yourself through the Labor required by Education gives you an intellectual momentum that permits more in the future than seems possible at the beginning.

As an intellectual retreat for old age, these daily portions of an hour will erect for you a mansion which could not be built with all the gold and silver of the realm.

The EVENING AMERICAN guarantees to advertisers the largest circulation by far of any daily newspaper in Boston and over 200,000 more than the next highest evening paper, and over 75,000 more than all the other Boston evening newspapers combined. Circulation books open to all.

The Democratic Party Has a Splendid Platform

Some Things the Special Committee to Select Candidates for Governor and Lieutenant-Governor Must Take Into Consideration. An Attempt at Bossism That Furnishes a Strong Argument for Direct Nominations.

Another chapter of disgraceful Massachusetts Democratic politics has been written.

Another pitiful exhibition of political viciousness has been made by selfish leaders of the Boston Democratic machine.

The jackass and the jackal elements of the party were powerful enough to throw the Democratic State Convention into a confusion that was hopeless and into a state of disorder that was riotous.

Every decent citizen of the Commonwealth must deplore the scenes of violence that took place in Faneuil Hall. Disgust is not confined to members of the Democratic party.

Sad as was the spectacle and regretable as was the lack of accomplishment, there is one great big grain of comfort—that is, the great mass of evidence and the strong argument submitted in favor of State-wide direct primary nominations.

Under a proper system of State-wide direct nominations, the Democratic party and the State would have been spared this unhappy and unfortunate contribution to the record of Massachusetts politics.

Such a system would do away with boss-ruled conventions and their attendant evils. It would be as effective against the bossism which rules the Republican party, and which is silk-hatted, kid-gloved and highly-cultured, as it would be against the hard-fisted, bull-headed and bulldozing brand of the Boston Democratic machine.

If the people would rid themselves of political bosses of all kinds, they must rise up in their might and demand the speedy adoption of a system which provides for the direct nomination of all State, county and city officials.

If the Democrats of Boston are not heartily ashamed of the dominant element of the Boston organization, because of certain things that transpired in connection with the State Convention, it can be said with positive assurance that the Democrats of every other section of the State are ashamed of it.

The committee that has been entrusted with the duty of selecting candidates for Governor and Lieutenant-Governor, in the event of the withdrawal of the present nominees, have a most important task to perform.

It rests with them to say whether or no the party is to throw away their chance of success.

It rests with them to say whether the party is to go forward or slump backward.

The Democratic platform is a splendid one. It is strong and plain, and pregnant with vital issues, in which the people are taking a most unusual interest. It gauges well the temper of the times and is a promise of earnest endeavor for better things.

It is a platform that thousands of independent and thousands of progressive Republicans endorse. And it would influence them to vote for proper candidates.

Candidates must be found by this committee who stand squarely on the platform. It will never do for them to select men whose affiliations or past performances could give the slightest cause for suspicion that they are not sincerely in accord with the spirit of the platform.

The select committee must take into consideration many things. They would do well to give no heed to the demands of men who make politics a profession for their own personal benefit or to the advice of men known to be representatives of Special Interests.

They must take into consideration the fact that all the voters are going to pass judgment upon their selections.

The men they name as candidates for Governor and Lieutenant-Governor must be acceptable to that large element which is opposed to Special Privilege.

They must be acceptable to that serious and sincere body of men who are anxious to swell the protest against the Republican tariff law which is responsible for the high cost of living.

In short, they must choose men who have the confidence and the respect of the great mass of the common people and are of a character strong enough to disobey the behests of the political bosses.

It is to be hoped that the action of this Democratic Committee will be so wise and popular that it will not be necessary for those who do not want to vote for Governor Draper to put an independent ticket in the field.

The advisable and the expedient thing to do, if possible—if it can be done with self-respect—is to unite the forces that are opposed to Draper

Believing that petty Democratic leaders were paid by certain Special Interests to disrupt the Democratic convention in order that the chances of Draper's re-election might be enhanced, influential men in organized labor are seriously considering the proposition of starting a movement, at the convention of the State Branch of the Federation of Labor next week, for the nomination of a Labor candidate for Governor.

It is to be hoped that the Democratic Committee will select candidates whose standing will be an assurance to organized labor that they can conscientiously support them.

It is proper and it is meet that there should be criticism of the Democratic convention; also it is lamentable.

The Boston crowd deserves all the censure it is receiving for its rule or ruin tactics, for its bullying and coercing of delegates and for its underhanded attacks on Hamlin and Vahey. The officials of the Democratic State Committee are no less deserving of censure for assuming to be the masters rather than the servants of the party.

Vahey has come forth from all the turmoil with honor and credit. He has won many friends by his manly conduct and brave fight. He has proved himself a man of strong convictions and character. He refused to deal in votes with the Boston traders or to be tricked by them. He is to be congratulated for shining so brightly in contrast with his detractors.

Hamlin, despite some attacks that were unworthy of any but the meanest minds, still gracious and optimistic, is hopeful that something may be done to promote right principles and elect progressive candidates. His reply to a notorious agent of the Boston traders, who wanted to know how he would treat certain interests if elected Governor, ought to be printed in large type in Democratic history:

"I will be just. Go back and tell that to those who sent you to me," said Hamlin.

There is this much to be thankful for: In spite of their delegate driving and devious recourses, the bosses failed miserably; an excellent platform was adopted; splendid characters for real leadership were developed.

And there is still a chance to repair most of the damage.
